INTRODUCTION

This revised edition of the ABA Guidelines for the Appointment and Performance of Defense Counsel in Death Penalty Cases is the product of a two-year long drafting effort. In April 2001, the ABA Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants and the ABA Special Committee on Death Penalty Representation jointly sponsored the ABA Death Penalty Guidelines Revision Project to update the Guidelines, which were originally adopted by the ABA House of Delegates in 1989. An Advisory Committee of experts was recruited to review and identify necessary revisions, including representatives from the following ABA and outside entities: ABA Criminal Justice Section; ABA Section of Litigation; ABA Section on Individual Rights and Responsibilities; ABA Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants; ABA Special Committee on Death Penalty Representation; National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers; National Legal Aid and Defender Association; Federal Death Penalty Resource Counsel; Habeas Assistance and Training Counsel; and State Capital Defenders Association.

Expert capital litigators were retained as consultants to the ABA Death Penalty Guidelines Revision Project to incorporate the decisions of the Advisory Committee into preliminary drafts of revisions. Drafts were considered by Advisory Committee members during several day-long meetings in Washington, D.C. as well as follow-up discussions. The final working draft of the revisions was approved by the ABA Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants and the ABA Special Committee on Death Penalty Representation. The ABA House of Delegates approved the revised edition of the Guidelines on February 10, 2003.

The final product, this revised edition of the ABA Guidelines for the Appointment and Performance of Defense Counsel in Death Penalty Cases, is the result of an extensive and conscientious drafting and review process by experts in the field of death penalty litigation. The revised edition provides comprehensive, up-to-date guidance for professionals who work in this specialized and demanding field and helps to ensure effective assistance of counsel for all persons charged with or convicted of capital crimes.

Guideline 1.1 Objective and Scope of Guidelines

- A. The objective of these Guidelines is to set forth a national standard of practice for the defense of capital cases in order to ensure high quality legal representation for all persons facing the possible imposition or execution of a death sentence by any jurisdiction.
- B. These Guidelines apply from the moment the client is taken into custody and extend to all stages of every case in which the jurisdiction may be entitled to seek the death penalty, including initial and ongoing investigation, pretrial proceedings, trial, post-conviction review, clemency proceedings, and any connected litigation.

Definitional Notes

Throughout these Guidelines:

1. As in the first edition, “should” is used as a mandatory term.
2. By “jurisdiction” is meant the government under whose legal authority the death sentence is to be imposed. Most commonly, this will be a state (as opposed to, e.g., a county) or the federal government as a whole. The term also includes the military and any other relevant unit of government (e.g., Commonwealth, Territory). Where a federal judicial district or circuit is meant, the Commentary will so state.
3. The terms “counsel,” “attorney,” and “lawyer” apply to all attorneys, whether appointed, retained, acting pro bono, or employed by any defender organization (e.g., federal or state public defenders offices, resource centers), who act on behalf of the defendant in a capital case. When modified by “private,” these terms apply to both pro bono and retained attorneys.
4. The term “custody” is used in the inclusive sense of Hensley v. Municipal Court, 411 U.S. 345, 350-51 (1973).
5. The term “post-conviction” is a general one, including (a) all stages of direct appeal within the jurisdiction and certiorari (b) all stages of state collateral review proceedings (however denominated under state law) and certiorari, (c) all stages of federal collateral review proceedings, however denominated (ordinarily petitions for writs of habeas corpus or motions pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2255, but including all applications of similar purport, e.g., for writ of error coram nobis), and including all applications for action by the Courts of Appeals or the United States Supreme Court (commonly certiorari, but also, e.g., applications for original writs of habeas corpus, applications for certificates of probable cause), all applications for interlocutory relief (e.g., stay of execution, appointment of counsel) in connection with any of the foregoing. If a particular subcategory of post-conviction proceeding is meant, the language of the relevant Guideline or Commentary will so state.
6. The terms “defendant,” “petitioner,” “inmate,” “accused” and “client” are used interchangeably.

7. The terms “capital case” and “death penalty case” are used interchangeably.
8. The terms “defender organization,” “Independent Authority,” and “Responsible Agency” are defined in Guideline 3.1 and accompanying Commentary
9. The term "Legal Representation Plan" is defined in Guideline 2.1.

History of Guideline

The Commentary to the original edition of this Guideline stated that it was designed to express existing “practice norms and constitutional requirements.” This thought has been moved to the black letter in order to emphasize that these Guidelines are not aspirational. Instead, they embody the current consensus about what is required to provide effective defense representation in capital cases.

The first edition of this Guideline stated that the objective in providing counsel in death penalty cases should be to ensure the provision of “quality legal representation.” The language has been amended to call for “high quality legal representation” to emphasize that, because of the extraordinary complexity and demands of capital cases, a significantly greater degree of skill and experience on the part of defense counsel is required than in a noncapital case.

The Guidelines formerly covered only “defendants eligible for appointment of counsel.” Their scope has been revised for this edition to cover “all persons facing the possible imposition or execution of a death sentence.” The purpose of the change is to make clear that the obligations of these Guidelines are applicable in all capital cases, including those in which counsel is retained or providing representation on a pro bono basis. The definition of “counsel” reflects this change.

The use of the term “jurisdiction” as now defined has the effect of broadening the range of proceedings covered. In accordance with current ABA policy, the Guidelines now apply to military proceedings, whether by way of court martial, military commission or tribunal, or otherwise.

In accordance with the same policy, the words “from the moment the client is taken into custody” have been added to make explicit that these Guidelines also apply to circumstances in which an uncharged prisoner who might face the death penalty is denied access to counsel seeking to act on his or her behalf (e.g., by the federal government invoking national security, or by state authorities exceeding constitutional limitations). This language replaces phraseology in the former Guidelines which made them applicable to “cases in which the death penalty is sought.” The period between an arrest or detention and the prosecutor’s declaration of intent to seek the death penalty is often critically important. In addition to enabling counsel to counsel his or her client and to obtain information regarding guilt that may later become unavailable, effective advocacy by defense counsel during this period may persuade the prosecution not to seek the death penalty. Thus, it is imperative that counsel begin investigating mitigating evidence and assembling the defense team as early as possible – well before the prosecution has actually determined that the death penalty will be sought.

These Guidelines, therefore, apply in any circumstance in which a detainee of the government may face a possible death sentence, regardless of whether formal legal proceedings have been commenced or the prosecution has affirmatively indicated that the death penalty will be sought. The case remains subject to these Guidelines until the imposition of the death penalty is no longer a legal possibility. In addition, as more fully described in the Commentary, these Guidelines also recognize that capital defense counsel may be required to pursue related litigation on the client's behalf outside the confines of the criminal prosecution itself.

Commentary

Introduction

In 1932, Mr. Justice Sutherland, writing for the United States Supreme Court in Powell v. Alabama, a death penalty case, acknowledged that a person facing criminal charges "requires the guiding hand of counsel at every step in the proceedings against him."¹

More than seventy years later, death penalty cases have become so specialized that defense counsel have duties and functions definably different from those of counsel in ordinary criminal cases.²

The quality of counsel's "guiding hand" in modern capital cases is crucial to ensuring a reliable determination of guilt and the imposition of an appropriate sentence. Today, it is

Scott*, 512 U.S. 849, 855 (1994) (noting the uniqueness and complexity of death penalty jurisprudence); see also Gary Goodpaster, The Trial for Life: Effective Assistance of Counsel in Death Penalty Cases, 58 N.Y.U. L. REV. 299 (1983); Andrea D. Lyon, Defending the Death Penalty Case: What Makes Death Different?, 42 MERCER L. REV. 695 (1991); Welsh S. universally accepted that the responsibilities of defense counsel in a death penalty case are uniquely demanding, both in the highly specialized legal knowledge that counsel must possess and in the advocacy skills he or she must master. At every stage of a capital case, counsel must be aware of specialized and frequently changing legal principles and rules. Counsel must be able to develop strategies applying existing rules in the pressure-filled environment of high-stakes, complex litigation, as well as anticipate changes in the law that might eventually result in the appellate reversal of an unfavorable judgment.

As one writer has explained:

Every task ordinarily performed in the representation of a criminal defendant is more difficult and time-consuming when the defendant is facing execution. The responsibilities thrust upon defense counsel in a capital case carry with them psychological and emotional pressures unknown elsewhere in the law. In addition, defending a capital case is an intellectually rigorous enterprise, requiring command of the rules unique to capital litigation and constant vigilance in keeping abreast of new developments in a volatile and highly nuanced area of the law.³

Due to the extraordinary and irrevocable nature of the penalty, at every stage of the proceedings counsel must make “extraordinary efforts on behalf of the accused.”⁴ As discussed infra in the text accompanying notes 228-29, these efforts may need to include litigation or administrative advocacy outside the confines of the capital case itself (e.g., pursuit of information through a state open records law,⁵ administrative proceedings to obtain or correct a military record, a collateral attack to invalidate a predicate conviction,⁶ litigation of a systemic challenge to the jury selection procedures of a jurisdiction or district,⁷ or to a jurisdiction’s clemency process).⁸

⁶ For example, the defendant prevailed in Johnson v. Mississippi, 486 U.S. 578, 587 (1988) (disallowing use of prior conviction used in aggravation) only after the same pro bono counsel successfully litigated People v. Johnson, 69 N.Y.2d 339, 342 (1987) (vacating that conviction). See infra text accompanying note 21.

Structure of the Guidelines

This Commentary provides a general overview of the areas in which counsel must be prepared to perform effectively and be given appropriate governmental support in doing so. These areas are addressed more specifically in subsequent Guidelines and commentaries. While there is some inevitable overlap, Guidelines 1.1–10.1 contain primarily principles and policies that should guide jurisdictions in creating a system for the delivery of defense services in capital cases, and Guidelines 10.2-10.15.2 contain primarily performance standards defining the duties of counsel handling those cases.

Representation at Trial

Trial attorneys in death penalty cases must be able to apply sophisticated jury selection techniques, including rehabilitation of venire members who initially state opposition to the death penalty and demonstration of bias on the part of prospective jurors who will automatically vote to impose the death penalty if the defendant is convicted on the capital charge.⁹ Counsel must be experienced in the utilization of expert witnesses and evidence, such as psychiatric and forensic evidence, and must be able to challenge zealously the prosecution’s evidence and experts through effective cross-examination.¹⁰

An attorney representing the accused in a death penalty case must fully investigate the relevant facts. Because counsel faces what are effectively two different trials – one regarding whether the defendant is guilty of a capital crime, and the other concerning whether the defendant should be sentenced to death¹¹ – providing quality representation in capital cases requires counsel to undertake correspondingly broad investigation and preparation. Investigation and planning for both phases must begin immediately upon counsel’s entry into the case, even before the prosecution has affirmatively indicated that it will seek the death penalty.¹² Counsel must

ASS’N OF THE BAR OF CITY OF N.Y. 848, 854 (1989) [hereinafter Legislative Modification] (“[For a lawyer], taking such a case means making a commitment to the full legal and factual evaluation of two very different proceedings (guilt and sentencing) in circumstances where the client is likely to be the subject of intense public hostility, where the state has devoted maximum efforts to the prosecution, and where one must endure the draining emotional effects of one’s personal responsibility for the outcome.”)

promptly obtain the investigative resources necessary to prepare for both phases, including at minimum the assistance of a professional investigator and a mitigation specialist, as well as all professional expertise appropriate to the case.¹³ Comprehensive pretrial investigation is a necessary prerequisite to enable counsel to negotiate a plea that will allow the defendant to serve a lesser sentence,¹⁴ to persuade the prosecution to forego seeking a death sentence at trial, or to uncover facts that will make the client legally ineligible for the death penalty.¹⁵ At the same time, counsel must consciously work to establish the special rapport with the client that will be necessary for a productive professional relationship over an extended period of stress.¹⁶

With respect to the guilt/innocence phase, defense counsel must independently investigate the circumstances of the crime, and all evidence – whether testimonial, forensic, or otherwise – purporting to inculcate the client. To assume the accuracy of whatever information the client may initially offer or the prosecutor may choose or be compelled to disclose is to render ineffective assistance of counsel. The defense lawyer’s obligation includes not only finding, interviewing, and scrutinizing the backgrounds of potential prosecution witnesses, but also searching for any other potential witnesses who might challenge the prosecution’s version of events, and subjecting all forensic evidence to rigorous independent scrutiny. Further, notwithstanding the prosecution’s burden of proof on the capital charge, defense counsel may need to investigate possible affirmative defenses – ranging from absolute defenses to liability (e.g., self-defense or insanity) to partial defenses that might bar a death sentence (e.g., guilt of a lesser-included offense). In addition to investigating the alleged offense, counsel must also thoroughly investigate all events surrounding the arrest, particularly if the prosecution intends to introduce evidence obtained pursuant to alleged waivers by the defendant (e.g., inculpatory statements or items recovered in searches of the accused’s home).

Moreover, trial counsel must coordinate and integrate the presentation during the guilt phase of the trial with the projected strategy for seeking a non-death sentence at the penalty phase.¹⁷

PROSECUTION FUNCTION AND DEFENSE FUNCTION (3d ed. 1993) (“Defense counsel should conduct a prompt investigation of the circumstances of the case and explore all avenues leading to facts relevant to the merits of the case and the penalty in the event of conviction. . . . The duty to investigate exists regardless of the accused’s admissions or statements to defense counsel of facts constituting guilt or the accused’s stated desire to plead guilty.”)

At that phase, defense counsel must both rebut the prosecution's case in favor of the death penalty and affirmatively present the best possible case in favor of a sentence other than death.¹⁸

If the defendant has any prior criminal history, the prosecution can be expected to attempt to offer it in support of a death sentence. Defense counsel accordingly must comprehensively investigate – together with the defense investigator, a mitigation specialist, and other members of the defense team – the defendant's behavior and the circumstances of the conviction.¹⁹ Only then can counsel protect the accused's Fourteenth Amendment right to deny or rebut factual allegations made by the prosecution in support of a death sentence,²⁰ and the client's Eighth Amendment right not to be sentenced to death based on prior convictions obtained in violation of his constitutional rights.²¹

If uncharged prior misconduct is arguably admissible, defense counsel must assume that the prosecution will attempt to introduce it, and accordingly must thoroughly investigate it as an integral part of preparing for the penalty phase.²²

Along with preparing to counter the prosecution's case for the death penalty, defense counsel must develop an affirmative case for sparing the defendant's life.²³ A capital defendant has an unqualified right to present any facet of his character, background, or record that might call for a sentence less than death.²⁴ This Eighth Amendment right to offer mitigating evidence “does nothing to fulfill its purpose unless it is understood to presuppose that the defense lawyer will unearth, develop, present and insist on the consideration of those ‘compassionate or mitigating factors stemming from the diverse frailties of humankind.’”²⁵ Nor will the presentation be persuasive unless it (a) is consistent with that made by the defense at the guilt phase and (b) links

²¹ See Johnson v. Mississippi, 486 U.S. 578, 587 (1988). the client's behavior to the evidence offered in mitigation.²⁶

Finally, trial counsel, like counsel throughout the process, must raise every legal claim that may ultimately prove meritorious, lest default doctrines later bar its assertion. “[T]he courts have shown a remarkable lack of solicitude for prisoners – including ones executed as a result – whose attorneys through no fault of the prisoners were not sufficiently versed in the law . . . [to] consider the possibility that a claim long rejected by local, state, and federal courts might succeed in the future or in a higher court.”²⁷

The Commentary to the first edition of this Guideline noted that “many indigent capital defendants are not receiving the assistance of a lawyer sufficiently skilled in practice to render quality assistance,” and supported the statement with numerous examples. The situation is no better today.²⁸ Indeed, problems with the quality of defense representation in death penalty cases

²⁷ JAMES S. LIEBMAN & RANDY HERTZ, FEDERAL HABEAS CORPUS PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 11.2(a), at 482 (4th ed. 2001). Thus, for example, within a single week in the spring of 2002, the Supreme Court rendered two major rulings favorable to capital defendants. See Atkins v. Virginia, 122 S. Ct. 2242, 2252 (2002) (holding that the Constitution bars execution of mentally retarded individuals); Ring v. Arizona, 122 S. Ct. 2248, 2443 (2002) (applying Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000) to capital cases). In both cases, the Court squarely overruled governing precedent. See Penry v. Lynaugh, 492 U.S. 302, 340 (1989) (holding that the Constitution does not bar the execution of mentally retarded individuals); Walton v. Arizona, 497 U.S. 639, 679 (1990) (upholding same statute later invalidated in Ring against same challenge); Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 497 (2000) (stating that Walton remained good law). It would have been appropriate (and indeed, some Justices might believe, required on pain of forfeiture) for capital counsel to assert these claims at every stage in the proceedings, even though they were then plainly at odds with the governing law. See infra Guideline 10.8 and accompanying Commentary.

One current example is the potential categorical unconstitutionality of the execution of juveniles. In light of a growing body of scientific evidence regarding the diminished culpability of juveniles, Eighth Amendment considerations, and international laws and treaties forbidding the execution for crimes committed while under the age of 18, four current Justices have suggested that the Court should absolutely bar the execution of such offenders. See In re Stanford, 123 S. Ct. 472 (2002). Counsel would be remiss not to assert the claim, notwithstanding that the Court has previously rejected it. See Stanford v. Kentucky, 492 U.S. 361 (1989). A similar example is discussed infra at note 350.

have been so profound and pervasive that several Supreme Court Justices have openly expressed concern. Justice Ginsberg told a public audience that she had “yet to see a death case among the dozens coming to the Supreme Court on eve-of-execution stay applications in which the defendant was well represented at trial” and that “people who are well represented at trial do not get the death penalty.”²⁹ Similarly, Justice O’Connor expressed concern that the system “may well be allowing some innocent defendants to be executed” and suggested that “[p]erhaps it’s time to look at minimum standards for appointed counsel in death cases and adequate compensation for appointed counsel when they are used.”³⁰ As Justice Breyer has said, “the inadequacy of representation in capital case” is “a fact that aggravates the other failings” of the death penalty system as a whole.³¹

In the past, post-conviction review has often been relied upon to identify and correct untrustworthy verdicts.³² However, legal changes in the habeas corpus regime,³³ combined with

The “failings” to which Justice Breyer refers are many of the same ones that led the ABA to call for a moratorium on the imposition of the death penalty. See ABA, Report Accompanying Recommendation 107, *3 (Feb. 3, 1997) (“Today, administration of the death penalty, far from being fair and consistent, is instead a haphazard maze of unfair practices with no internal consistency.”).

³³ In 1996, Congress enacted the Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act (the AEDPA), which imposed substantial restrictions on the availability of federal habeas corpus for state prisoners. The AEDPA established strict deadlines for the filing of a federal habeas petition, limits on the scope of review of state court decisions, restrictions on the availability of evidentiary hearings to develop facts in support of constitutional claims, and placed stringent constraints on federal courts’ consideration of additional applications for review by the petitioner. See generally 28 U.S.C. § 2244-2264. There is significant cause for concern that these provisions may “greatly diminish the reliability of the capital system’s review process and of the capital verdicts that the system produces.” James S. Liebman, An “Effective Death Penalty”? AEDPA and Error Detection in Capital Cases, 67 BROOK. L. REV. 411, 427 (2001). See also ABA Panel Discussion, *Dead Man Walking Without Due Process? Yackle, A Primer on the New Habeas Corpus Statute, 44 BUFF. L. REV. 381, 386-93 (1996). One reason for this concern is that portions of the legislation seemed to reduce the level of scrutiny that the federal courts could give to state capital convictions. See 28 U.S.C. § 2254 (d), (e) (providing that writ may not be granted unless state proceedings resulted in a decision that was “contrary to or involved an unreasonable application of clearly established Federal law,” or “was based on an

the Congress' defunding of post-conviction defender organizations (PCDOs) in 1995,³⁴ make it less likely that such traditional "fail-safes" will continue to operate properly in the future. Under the standards set out by the Supreme Court for reviewing claims of ineffective assistance of counsel,³⁵ even seriously deficient performance all too rarely leads to reversal.³⁶ Hence, jurisdictions that continue to impose the death penalty must commit the substantial resources necessary to ensure effective representation at the trial stage.³⁷ In mandating the provision of high quality legal representation at the trial level of a capital case, this Guideline recognizes the simple truth that any other course has weighty costs – to be paid in money and delay if cases are reversed at later stages or in injustice if they are not.

Post-conviction Review

Ensuring high quality legal representation in capital trials, however, does not diminish the need for equally effective representation on appeal, in state and federal post-conviction proceedings, and in applications for executive clemency. Because each of those proceedings has a unique role to play in the capital process, because both legal and social norms commonly evolve over the course of a case, and because of “the general tendency of evidence of innocence to emerge only at a relatively late stage in capital proceedings,”³⁸ jurisdictions that retain capital punishment must provide representation in accordance with the standards of these Guidelines “at all stages of the case.” (Subsection B) Post-judgment proceedings demand a high degree of technical proficiency, and the skills essential to effective representation differ in significant ways from those necessary to success at trial. In addition, death penalty cases at the post-conviction stage may be subject to rules that provide less time for preparation than is available in noncapital cases.³⁹ Substantive pleadings may have to be prepared simultaneously with, or even be delayed for, pleadings to stay the client’s execution.⁴⁰ For post-judgment review to succeed as a safeguard against injustice, courts must appoint appropriately trained and experienced lawyers.

A. Representation on Direct Appeal

The Constitution guarantees effective assistance of counsel on an appeal as of right.⁴¹ The “guiding hand of counsel” must lead the condemned client through direct review. Appellate counsel must be intimately familiar with technical rules of issue preservation and presentation, as well as the substantive state, federal, and international law governing death penalty cases, including issues which are “percolating” in the lower courts but have not yet been authoritatively resolved by the Supreme Court.⁴² Counsel must also be capable of making complex strategic decisions that maximize the client’s chances of ultimate success in the event that the direct appeal is resolved unfavorably.⁴³

Habeas corpus and other procedures for seeking collateral relief are especially important in capital cases.⁴⁴ Quality representation in both state and federal court is essential if erroneous convictions are to be corrected.⁴⁵

1. State Collateral Review Proceedings

Counsel's obligations in state collateral review proceedings are demanding.⁴⁶ Counsel must be prepared to thoroughly reinvestigate the entire case to ensure that the client was neither actually innocent nor convicted or sentenced to death in violation of either state or federal law. This means that counsel must obtain and read the entire record of the trial, including all transcripts and motions, as well as proceedings (such as bench conferences) that may have been recorded but not transcribed. In many cases, the record is voluminous, often amounting to many thousands of pages. Counsel must also inspect the evidence and obtain the files of trial and appellate counsel, again scrutinizing them for what is missing as well as what is present.

⁴⁶ Some states provide attorneys at public expense to death-sentenced prisoners seeking state post-conviction relief, but others do not. See Andrew Hammel, Diabolical Federalism: A Functional Critique and Proposed Reconstruction of Death Penalty Federal Habeas, 39 AM. CRIM. L. REV. 1, 83-99 (2002) (providing state-by-state list); Jennifer N. Ide, The Case of Exzavious Lee Gibson: A Georgia Court's (Constitutional) Denial of a Federal Right, 47 EMORY L.J. 1079, 1099-1110 (1998); Clive A. Stafford Smith & Remy Voisin Starns, Folly By Fiat: Pretending that Death Row Inmates Can Represent Themselves in State Capital Postconviction Proceedings, 45 LOY. L. REV. 55, 56 (1999). Moreover, even in those states that nominally do provide counsel for collateral review, chronic underfunding, lack of standards, and a dearth of qualified lawyers willing to accept appointment have resulted in a disturbingly large number of instances in which attorneys have failed to provide their clients meaningful assistance. See, e.g., TEX. DEFENDER SERV., A STATE OF DENIAL: TEXAS JUSTICE AND THE DEATH PENALTY, ch. 7 (2002), available at <http://www.texasdefender.org/study/study.html> (reporting that a review of 103 post-conviction petitions filed by court-appointed counsel in Texas death penalty cases between 1995 and 2000 indicated that 25 percent of the petitions were 15 pages long or less, and that counsel offered no evidence outside the trial record in 40 percent of the cases reviewed).

These considerations suggest that counsel should continue to test the solidity of Murray v. Giarratano, 492 U.S. 1 (1989) (rejecting claim of constitutional right to counsel in state capital post-conviction proceedings).

Like trial counsel, counsel handling state collateral proceedings must undertake a thorough investigation into the facts surrounding all phases of the case. It is counsel's obligation to make an independent examination of all of the available evidence – both that which the jury heard and that which it did not – to determine whether the decision maker at trial made a fully informed resolution of the issues of both guilt and punishment.

Since the reinstatement of the death penalty in 1977, there have been more than 100 known wrongful convictions in capital cases in the United States.⁴⁷ As further described infra in the text accompanying notes 196-200, these resulted from a variety of causes, including the testimony of unreliable jailhouse informants,⁴⁸ the use of dubious or fraudulent forensic scientific methods,⁴⁹

⁴⁷ See DEATH PENALTY INFORMATION CENTER: Innocence and the Death Penalty, available at <http://www.deathpenaltyinfor.org/innoc.html> (last visited December 18, 2002) (stating that there are 102 people that have been wrongly convicted of capital crimes). prosecutorial misconduct, and incompetence of defense counsel at trial. Because state collateral proceedings may present the last opportunity to present new evidence to challenge the conviction, it is imperative that counsel conduct a searching inquiry to assess whether any mistake may have been made.

Reinvestigation of the case will require counsel to interview most, if not all, of the critical witnesses for the prosecution and investigate their backgrounds. Counsel must determine if the witness's testimony bears scrutiny or whether motives for fabrication or bias were left uncovered at the time of trial. Counsel must also assess all of the non-testimonial evidence and consider such issues as whether forensic testing must now be performed, either because some technology, such as DNA, was unavailable at the time of trial or because trial counsel failed to ensure that necessary testing took place.⁵⁰

Counsel must conduct a similarly comprehensive reevaluation of the punishment phase to verify or undermine the accuracy of all evidence presented by the prosecution, and to determine whether the decisionmaker was properly informed of all relevant evidence,⁵¹ able to give appropriate weight to that evidence,⁵² and provided with a clear and legally accurate set of instructions for communicating its conclusion.⁵³

2. Federal Habeas Corpus

In addition to requiring counsel to undertake all the tasks just described in Section B(1), federal collateral proceedings present another set of obstacles – ones that highlight the importance of quality representation. From 1973 to 1995, capital habeas corpus petitioners obtained relief at many times the rate of non-capital ones⁵⁴ and they should continue to do so in the future. But federal habeas corpus actions are governed by a complex set of procedural rules.⁵⁵ Counsel must master these thoroughly.⁵⁶ Moreover, restrictions on the availability of federal habeas relief for state prisoners imposed by the AEDPA will continue to raise numerous novel legal issues.

C. Executive Clemency

Executive clemency plays a particularly important role in death penalty cases, as it “provides the [government] with a final, deliberative opportunity to reassess this irrevocable punishment.”⁵⁷ Because post-judgment proceedings have traditionally provided very limited opportunity for review of questions of guilt or innocence, clemency is “the historic remedy for preventing miscarriages of justice where judicial process has been exhausted.”⁵⁸ As the Supreme Court has recognized, “history is replete with examples of wrongfully convicted persons who have been pardoned in the wake of after-discovered evidence establishing their innocence.”⁵⁹ Recent advances in the use of DNA technologies, combined with restrictions on the availability of post-conviction review, have elevated the important role that clemency has played as the “fail-safe” of the criminal justice system,⁶⁰ and increased the demands on counsel.⁶¹ Moreover, wholly apart

REV. 1839, 1849 (2000) (federal habeas relief was granted in 40 percent of 599 cases between 1973 and 1995 in which the judgment remained intact after direct appeal and state post-conviction review). from questions of guilt or innocence, executive clemency has been granted in death penalty cases for a broad range of humanitarian reasons.⁶² Recognizing these considerations, the Supreme Court has begun to apply due process protection to clemency proceedings.⁶³ Thus, in addition to assembling the most persuasive possible record for the decisionmaker, counsel must carefully examine the possibility of pressing legal claims asserting the right to a fuller and fairer process.⁶⁴

The Imperative of a Systemic Approach

General statements of expectations about what lawyers should do will not themselves ensure high quality legal representation. Indeed, Guidelines confined to such statements would be ones “that palter with us in a double sense, that keep the word of promise to our ear, and break it to our hope.”⁶⁵ Attorney error is often the result of systemic problems, not individual deficiency.⁶⁶ The provision of counsel for indigent capital defendants is too frequently made through ad hoc appointment, a system inimical to effective representation.⁶⁷ Although defender offices generally have the experience and dedication to provide high quality legal representation in capital cases, they are commonly overworked and inadequately funded. And private counsel often discover too late that they have taken on a task for which they are unqualified⁶⁸ or lack sufficient resources. The Guidelines that follow, therefore, not only detail the elements of quality representation, but mandate the systematic provision of resources to ensure that such representation is achieved in fact, whether counsel is individually assigned, employed by a defender office, or privately retained

Conclusion

Unless legal representation at each stage of a capital case reflects current standards of practice, there is an unacceptable “risk that the death penalty will be imposed in spite of factors which may call for a less severe penalty.”⁷⁰ Accordingly, any jurisdiction wishing to impose a death sentence must at minimum provide representation that comports with these Guidelines.⁷¹

⁷¹ Cf. Legislative Modification, supra note 11, at 848 (“[F]or so long as the death penalty continues to exist in this country, capital inmates are entitled to procedures – including ones for the provision of competent counsel – that result in the full and fair review of their convictions and sentences. Correlatively, any state which chooses to impose death sentences must accept the obligation of providing mechanisms for assuring that those sentences are legally and factually correct at the time of their execution.”).

Guideline 2.1 Adoption and Implementation of a Plan to Provide High Quality Legal Representation in Death Penalty Cases

- A. Each jurisdiction should adopt and implement a plan formalizing the means by which high quality legal representation in death penalty cases is to be provided in accordance with these Guidelines (the “Legal Representation Plan”).
- B. The Legal Representation Plan should set forth how the jurisdiction will conform to each of these Guidelines.
- C. All elements of the Legal Representation Plan should be structured to ensure that counsel defending death penalty cases are able to do so free from political influence and under conditions that enable them to provide zealous advocacy in accordance with professional standards.

History of Guideline

The obligation to create a formal “Legal Representation Plan” for provision of representation in death penalty cases was contained in Guideline 3.1 of the original edition. Subsection B is new and is designed to make it easier for jurisdictions to determine the necessary contents of a Plan. Subsection C is drawn from several sections of the original edition.

Commentary

Each jurisdiction should take effective measures to formalize the process by which high quality legal representation will be provided in capital cases. This may be done by statute, court order, regulation or otherwise. The critical element is that the plan be judicially enforceable against the jurisdiction.⁷² Experience shows, however, that a plan is most likely to succeed if it is embodied in a statute. That route maximizes judicial neutrality in passing on claims of non-compliance, and tends to result in greater transparency and access to public funds than do the other options.

The Legal Representation Plan should provide standards and procedures that apply to capital cases on a jurisdiction-wide basis. National professional groups concerned with criminal justice issues have for decades advocated that defender services be organized on a statewide basis.⁷³ Specifically, the ABA Criminal Justice Standards endorse statewide organization “as the best means for service provision.”⁷⁴ Jurisdiction-wide organization and funding can best ameliorate local disparities in resources and quality of representation, and insulate the administration of defense services from local political pressures.⁷⁵

This last item is, of course, of critical concern. “It is essential that both full-time defenders and assigned counsel be fully independent, free to act on behalf of their clients as dictated by their best professional judgment. A system that does not guarantee the integrity of the professional relation is fundamentally deficient in that it fails to provide counsel who have the same freedom of action as the lawyer whom the person with sufficient means can afford to retain.”⁷⁶

⁷³ See, e.g., NAT’L LEGAL AID & DEFENDER ASS’N, NATIONAL STUDY COMMISSION ON DEFENSE SERVICES, GUIDELINES FOR LEGAL DEFENSE SYSTEMS IN THE UNITED STATES FINAL REPORT (1976) (calling for a statewide organization with a centralized administration to “ensure uniformity and equality of legal representation and supporting services and to guarantee professional independence for individual defenders”); Nat’l Conf. of Comm’rs on Unif. State Laws, Prefatory Note to UNIFORM LAW COMMISSIONER’S MODEL PUBLIC DEFENDER ACT, in HANDBOOK OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF COMMISSIONERS ON UNIFORM STATE LAWS 267-268 (1970) (approving recommendation of National Defenders Conference that every state establish a statewide public defender system “to assure better coordination and consistency of approach throughout the state, [provide] better consultation with the several branches of state government, [...] reduce the administrative burden on court personnel and provide more efficient and more experienced defense counsel services to needy persons accused of crime”); TASK FORCE ON THE ADMIN. ⁷⁵ Mississippi, for example, has recently moved from a county-based to a state-based system for the provision of capital defense services. See Julie Goodman, Inmates on Death Row Given Last Hope, CLARION-LEDGER (Jackson, Miss.), May 13, 2002, at B1 (discussing post-conviction defense office); Emily Wagster, Capital Defense Job Filled; State Office to Provide Lawyers for Indigent, SUN HERALD (Biloxi, Miss.), July 7, 2001, at A2 (discussing trial defense office). Similarly, California has adopted statewide qualifications for appointed trial counsel in capital cases effective January 1, 2003. See Cal. Rules of Ct., R. 4.117.

(2002) (“The public defense function, including the selection, funding, and payment of defense counsel, is independent.”) (“The public defense function should be independent from political influence and subject to judicial supervision only in the same manner and to the same extent as retained counsel. To safeguard independence and to promote efficiency and quality of services, a non-partisan board should oversee defender, assigned counsel, or

Therefore, as Guideline 2.1(C) mandates, any acceptable Legal Representation Plan must assure that individual lawyers are not subject to formal or informal sanctions (e.g., through the denial of future appointments, reductions in fee awards, or withholding of promotions in institutional offices) for engaging in effective representation.⁷⁷ The same principle applies to the overall architecture of the system. Thus, for example, the head of a public defender office must be subject to judicial supervision only in the same manner and to the same extent as a lawyer in private practice – and not be subject to institutional arrangements that might enable his or her re-appointment to be blocked by judges irked at the zealous advocacy conducted by his or her office.

Moreover, the system must be structured so as to assure that each client receives defense services “in accordance with professional standards.” (Subsection C) For example, it is predictable that there will be conflicts of interest among various actors in the criminal justice system (e.g. co-defendants, co-operating witnesses), who may play different roles in different cases, and the plan must provide a mechanism to assure conflict-free representation.⁷⁸ contract systems. Removing oversight from the judiciary ensures judicial independence from undue political pressures and is an important means of furthering the independence of public defense. The selection of the chief defender and staff should be made on the basis of merit, and recruitment of attorneys should involve special efforts aimed at achieving diversity in attorney staff.”).

⁷⁸ For instance, although it may not violate the Sixth Amendment for defense counsel to have previously represented the victim, see Mickens v. Taylor, 122 S. Ct. 1237 (2002), it certainly violates ethical norms, see Brief of Legal Ethicists and the Stein Center for Law and Ethics as Amici Curiae in Support of Petitioner, Mickens v. Taylor, 122 S. Ct. 1237 (2002) (No. 00-9285) and would not be permitted by any acceptable plan for capital representation. Cf. Ex parte McCormick, 645 S.W.2d 801 (Tex. Crim. App. 1983) (en banc) (reversing two capital convictions because same counsel represented both co-defendants).

Guideline 3.1 Designation of a Responsible Agency

- A. The Legal Representation Plan should designate one or more agencies to be responsible, in accordance with the standards provided in these Guidelines for:
- 1. ensuring that each capital defendant in the jurisdiction receives high quality legal representation, and
 - 2. performing all the duties listed in Subsection E (the “Responsible Agency”).
- B. The Responsible Agency should be independent of the judiciary and it, and not the judiciary or elected officials, should select lawyers for specific cases.
- C. The Responsible Agency for each stage of the proceeding in a particular case should be one of the following:

Defender Organization

- 1. A “defender organization,” that is, either:
 - a. a jurisdiction-wide capital trial office, relying on staff attorneys, members of the private bar, or both to provide representation in death penalty cases; or
 - b. a jurisdiction-wide capital appellate and/or post-conviction defender office, relying on staff attorneys, members of the private bar, or both to provide representation in death penalty cases; or

Independent Authority

- 2. An “Independent Authority,” that is, an entity run by defense attorneys with demonstrated knowledge and expertise in capital representation.
- D. Conflict of Interest:
- 1. In any circumstance in which the performance by a defender organization of a duty listed in Subsection E would result in a conflict of interest, the relevant duty should be performed by the Independent Authority. The jurisdiction should implement an effectual system to identify and resolve such conflicts.
 - 2. When the Independent Authority is the Responsible Agency, attorneys who hold formal roles in the Independent Authority should be ineligible to represent defendants in capital cases within the jurisdiction during their term of service.

- E. The Responsible Agency should, in accordance with the provisions of these Guidelines, perform the following duties:
- 1. recruit and certify attorneys as qualified to be appointed to represent defendants in death penalty cases;
 - 2. draft and periodically publish rosters of certified attorneys;
 - 3. draft and periodically publish certification standards and procedures by which attorneys are certified and assigned to particular cases;
 - 4. assign the attorneys who will represent the defendant at each stage of every case, except to the extent that the defendant has private attorneys;
 - 5. monitor the performance of all attorneys providing representation in capital proceedings;
 - 6. periodically review the roster of qualified attorneys and withdraw certification from any attorney who fails to provide high quality legal representation consistent with these Guidelines;
 - 7. conduct, sponsor, or approve specialized training programs for attorneys representing defendants in death penalty cases; and
 - 8. investigate and maintain records concerning complaints about the performance of attorneys providing representation in death penalty cases and take appropriate corrective action without delay.

History of Guideline

The obligation of the Legal Representation Plan to designate a “Responsible Agency” for the appointment of counsel in death penalty cases was contained in Guideline 3.1 of the first edition. Subsection B makes it clear that the Responsible Agency should be an independent entity, and that lawyer selection should not be performed by the judiciary or elected officials. Subsection C is new and describes the acceptable kinds of Responsible Agencies. Subsection D is new and specifies the obligations of the Responsible Agency in the event of a conflict of interest. Lastly, part of subsection E is new and details the other duties of the Responsible Agency, including the duty to ensure that qualified attorneys are available to represent defendants in death penalty cases, the duty to promptly investigate complaints about the performance of attorneys, and the duty to take corrective action without delay.

Commentary

As indicated in Guideline 2.1(C) and the accompanying Commentary, the Legal Representation Plan must ensure that the capital defense function remains free from political influence. One important mechanism for accomplishing this goal is granting the authority for training, assigning, and monitoring capital defense lawyers to one or more entities independent of the judiciary and wholly devoted to fostering high quality legal defense representation.

This Guideline, based on accumulated experience, contemplates two structures that jurisdictions might employ.

1. In the first structure, the jurisdiction has created (a) a jurisdiction-wide capital trial organization, relying on staff attorneys, and, optionally, members of the private bar, and/or (b) a jurisdiction-wide capital appellate and/or post-conviction defender organization, relying on staff attorneys, and, optionally, members of the private bar. (Collectively, “defender organizations”).⁷⁹

In this structure, the defender organizations may both provide representation and perform all the functions listed in Subsection E as appropriate to their portion of the system, with one key exception. No defender organization may perform any function that would involve it in a conflict of interest, e.g., monitoring its own performance under Guideline 7.1 (A), investigating or disposing of a complaint against such a lawyer pursuant to Guideline 7.1 (B) against one of its staff lawyers, or making the appointment of counsel in a situation in which there exists a professional conflict. Thus, for example, if two defendants with antagonistic defenses were charged with a capital crime, the agency could assign itself to defend one of them but could play no role in the assignment of counsel to the other. Similarly, a defender organization could not monitor the quality of its own performance (Subsection E (5)).

Accordingly, this structure also contemplates the existence of an “Independent Authority,” which will at minimum deal with conflicts such as these.

2. In the second structure, an “Independent Authority,” an entity run by defense attorneys with demonstrated knowledge and expertise in the representation of persons facing the possible imposition or execution of a death sentence, performs all the functions listed in Subsection E but does not itself provide representation.

While serving the organization in a formal role, whether paid or unpaid (e.g., officers, directors, staff members), attorneys should not be eligible for appointment to death penalty cases.

⁷⁹ For example, in 1995, New York enacted a comprehensive legislative plan for a “capital defender office” (CDO) to provide representation and legal assistance in capital cases. NY. JUD. LAW § 35-b(3) (McKinney 2001). The CDO is authorized to represent capital defendants and also to advise and assist other appointed counsel in such cases. The office assists in determining qualification standards and presenting training programs for attorneys seeking to become certified to accept appointments. Other states have similar programs for providing representation in post-conviction proceedings. See, e.g., CAL. GOV’T CODE § 68661 (West Supp. 2002) (creating California Habeas Corpus Resource Center, which is authorized to provide representation and serve as a resource in state and federal post-conviction proceedings).

The idea is that attorneys should not be appointed by an entity in whose operations they are playing a material role. Thus, this provision does not extend to persons who are simply providing occasional advice to the entity.

The agency performing the function in the particular case, whether a defender organization or the Independent Authority, is referred to as “the Responsible Agency.”

The Responsible Agency must assess the qualifications of attorneys who wish to represent capital defendants, conducting a meaningful review of each request for inclusion on the roster of qualified counsel in light of the criteria listed in Guideline 5.1. In order to make informed decisions on eligibility, the Responsible Agency should have sufficient flexibility to gather as much relevant information as possible to secure a fair picture of the applicant’s ability and experience. The Responsible Agency should utilize whatever sources of information it deems appropriate, including in-court observations, writing samples, and information-gathering from the applicant, from judges before whom the applicant has appeared, and from attorneys, supervisors, and former clients who are familiar with the applicant’s professional abilities. The performance standards established pursuant to Guidelines 10.1 et seq. should also be used to evaluate the prior performance in capital cases of attorneys seeking to establish eligibility for renewal placement on the roster of qualified counsel.

In assigning attorneys to capital cases, the overriding consideration must always be to provide high quality legal representation to the person facing a possible death sentence. Adherence to a “strict rotation” system for assigning counsel in the interest of fairness to attorneys should never take precedence over the interests of the capital defendant in receiving the best possible representation. Rather, in making assignments of counsel to a particular capital case, the Responsible Agency should give careful consideration to counsel’s qualifications, skills, and experience; any aspects of the case that make assignment of a lawyer with specific qualifications or skills necessary or particularly appropriate (e.g., counsel’s ability to speak the client’s native language); and the relative onerousness of prospective lawyers’ existing caseloads. It is also appropriate to give consideration to maintaining continuity of counsel where the defendant has previously been represented by a qualified lawyer at an earlier stage of the proceedings, provided that (a) counsel is also deemed qualified to represent the client at the subsequent stage of the proceedings and (b) counsel’s representation of the client at successive stages of the proceedings does not present a conflict of interest.⁸⁰ Given the extraordinary demands and pressures placed on counsel in a capital case,⁸¹ the Responsible Agency should, in accordance with Guideline 4.1 (A)(1), ensure that at every stage of the proceedings the defendant is represented by counsel who are in a position to provide high quality legal representation. This may require the agency to furnish resources, in the form of additional counsel or otherwise,⁸² to private counsel.⁸³

⁸⁰ Of course, any applicable statutory provisions, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 2261(d), must also be observed.

⁸¹ See supra Guideline 1.1 and accompanying Commentary.

⁸² See infra Guideline 4.1 and accompanying Commentary.

The remaining elements of this Guideline reflect the longstanding view of the ABA that “jurisdictions that have the death penalty should establish and fund organizations to recruit, select, train, monitor, support, and assist attorneys involved at all stages of capital litigation and, if necessary, to participate in the trial of such cases.”⁸⁴ Several of these functions are described in greater detail in subsequent Guidelines.⁸⁵ The common theme, however, is that the provision of consistently high quality legal representation requires that the duties given to the Responsible Agency by this Guideline be performed by an entity with the authority and resources to discharge them vigorously.

of the case. In accordance with Guideline 4.1(B), the Responsible Agency must also assure that counsel have the necessary support services.

Guideline 4.1 The Defense Team and Supporting Services

- A. The Legal Representation Plan should provide for assembly of a defense team that will provide high quality legal representation.
- 1. The defense team should consist of no fewer than two attorneys qualified in accordance with Guideline 5.1, an investigator, and a mitigation specialist.
 - 2. The defense team should contain at least one member qualified by training and experience to screen individuals for the presence of mental or psychological disorders or impairments.
- B. The Legal Representation Plan should provide for counsel to receive the assistance of all expert, investigative, and other ancillary professional services reasonably necessary or appropriate to provide high quality legal representation at every stage of the proceedings. The Plan should specifically ensure provision of such services to private attorneys whose clients are financially unable to afford them.
- 1. Counsel should have the right to have such services provided by persons independent of the government.
 - 2. Counsel should have the right to protect the confidentiality of communications with the persons providing such services to the same extent as would counsel paying such persons from private funds.

History of Guideline

This Guideline is based on Guideline 8.1 of the original edition. In keeping the team approach described in the Commentary, Subsection A has been added to provide for the assembly of a “defense team.” The first sentence of Subsection B is based on the original version of the Guideline and has been revised to emphasize that the purpose of providing adequate support services is to further the overall goal of providing “high quality legal representation,” not merely “an adequate defense.” The second sentence is taken from Standard 5-1.4 of the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice: Providing Defense Services. Subsections B (1) and B (2) are new and reflect the decision to include private attorneys in these Guidelines.

Commentary

Introduction

In a capital case reaffirming that fundamental fairness entitles indigent defendants to the “basic tools of an adequate defense,” the United States Supreme Court stated:

We recognized long ago that mere access to the courthouse doors does not by itself assure a proper functioning of the adversary process, and that a criminal trial is fundamentally unfair if the [prosecution] proceeds against an indigent defendant without making certain that he has access to the raw materials integral to the building of an effective defense.⁸⁶

⁸⁶ Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68, 77 (1985).

It is critically important, therefore, that each jurisdiction authorize sufficient funds to enable counsel in capital cases to conduct a thorough investigation for trial, sentencing, appeal, post-conviction and clemency, and to procure and effectively present the necessary expert witnesses and documentary evidence.⁸⁷

The Team Approach to Capital Defense

National standards on defense services have consistently recognized that quality representation cannot be rendered unless assigned counsel have access to adequate supporting services, including, “expert witnesses capable of testifying at trial and at other proceedings, personnel skilled in social work and related disciplines to provide assistance at pretrial release hearings and at sentencing, and trained investigators to interview witnesses and to assemble demonstrative evidence.”⁸⁸

This need is particularly acute in death penalty cases. The prosecution commits vast resources to its effort to prove the defendant guilty of capital murder. The defense must both subject the prosecution’s evidence to searching scrutiny and build an affirmative case of its own.⁸⁹ Yet investigating a homicide is uniquely complex and often involves evidence of many different types. Analyzing and interpreting such evidence is impossible without consulting experts – whether pathologists, serologists, microanalysts, DNA analysts, ballistics specialists, translators, or others.⁹⁰

In particular, mental health experts are essential to defending capital cases. Neurological and psychiatric impairment, combined with a history of physical and sexual abuse, are common among persons convicted of violent offenses.⁹¹ Evidence concerning the defendant’s mental status is relevant to numerous issues that arise at various junctures during the proceedings, including competency to stand trial, sanity at the time of the offense, capacity to intend or premeditate death, ability to comprehend Miranda warnings, and competency to waive constitutional rights. The Constitution forbids the execution of persons with mental retardation,⁹² making this a necessary area of inquiry in every case. Further, the defendant's psychological and social history and his emotional and mental health are often of vital importance to the jury's decision at the punishment phase.⁹³ Creating a competent and reliable mental health evaluation consistent with prevailing standards of practice is a time-consuming and expensive process.⁹⁴ Counsel must compile extensive historical data, as well as obtaining a thorough physical and neurological examination. Diagnostic studies, neuropsychological testing, appropriate brain scans, blood tests or genetic studies, and consultation with additional mental health specialists may also be necessary.⁹⁵

Counsel's own observations of the client's mental status, while necessary,⁹⁶ can hardly be expected to be sufficient to detect the array of conditions (e.g., post-traumatic stress disorder, fetal alcohol syndrome, pesticide poisoning, lead poisoning, schizophrenia, mental retardation) that could be of critical importance. Accordingly, Subsection A (2) mandates that at least one member of the defense team (whether one of the four individuals constituting the smallest allowable team or an additional team member) be a person qualified by experience and training to screen for mental or psychological disorders or defects and recommend such further investigation of the subject as may seem appropriate.

Although mental health issues are so ubiquitous in capital defense representation that the provision of resources in that area should be routine, it bears emphasis that every situation will also have its own unique needs. The demands of each case – and each stage of the same case – will differ. Jurisdictions must therefore construe this Guideline broadly, keeping in mind the superior opportunity of defense counsel to determine what assistance is needed to provide high quality legal representation under the particular circumstances at hand and counsel's need to explore the potential of a variety of possible theories. For example, it might well be appropriate for counsel to retain an expert familiar with the cultural context by which the defendant was shaped, or a professional researcher to track down elusive archival records. While resources are not unlimited, of course, jurisdictions should also be mindful that sufficient funding early in a case may well result in significant savings to the system as a whole.⁹⁷

⁹⁷ For example, in light of the constitutional prohibition on the execution of the mentally retarded, see Atkins v. Virginia, 122 S. Ct. 2242 (2002), significant resources spent at the pretrial phase in investigating and presenting the defendant's retardation status will be amply repaid in future cost savings since the most likely outcomes are (a) the case is taken off the capital track

Effective Assistance of Experts

Subsections B (1) and B (2) are aimed at insuring that the fact of public funding does not diminish the quality of the assistance that counsel is able to obtain from experts. Thus, unless counsel agrees otherwise, the defendant is entitled to experts independent of the government; the jurisdiction may not meet its obligations by relegating him to the state mental hospital or the state crime laboratory.⁹⁸ Similarly, doctrines of privilege, work product, and the like should protect the communications between counsel and the experts just as they would if the experts were being paid with private funds. Procedures for the auditing of public funds should be structured so as to preserve this confidentiality.

The Core Defense Team

In addition to employing the particular nonlegal resources that high quality legal representation requires in each individual case, the standard of practice demands that counsel have certain specific forms of assistance in every case. This Guideline accordingly requires that those resources be provided.⁹⁹

A. The Investigator

The assistance of an investigator who has received specialized training is indispensable to discovering and developing the facts that must be unearthed at trial or in post-conviction proceedings. Although some investigative tasks, such as assessing the credibility of key trial witnesses, appropriately lie within the domain of counsel, the prevailing national standard of practice forbids counsel from shouldering primary responsibility for the investigation. Counsel lacks the special expertise required to accomplish the high quality investigation to which a capital defendant is entitled and simply has too many other duties to discharge in preparing the case. Moreover, the defense may need to call the person who conducted the interview as a trial witness.¹⁰⁰ As a result, an investigator should be part of the defense team at stage of a capital proceeding.

entirely, very possibly by agreement with the prosecution or (b) the issue is decided against the defendant, thus minimizing the likelihood of it being raised later. Similarly, it is not only expensive, but also extremely unjust for exculpatory evidence about which trial counsel should have learned from an expert to lie undiscovered until post-conviction proceedings many years later – years during which an innocent person is incarcerated. See Freedman, supra note 50, at 1094-95, 1098-99.

⁹⁹ This Guideline contemplates that defense counsel will be primarily responsible for selection of the remaining members of the defense team. (Guideline 10.4 infra discusses in greater detail the division of this responsibility among the attorneys on the team.) The Responsible Agency should, however, be prepared to provide assistance in finding qualified individuals to fill these roles.

¹⁰⁰ See infra Guideline 10.7 and accompanying Commentary.

B. The Mitigation Specialist

A mitigation specialist is also an indispensable member of the defense team throughout all capital proceedings. Mitigation specialists possess clinical and information-gathering skills and training that most lawyers simply do not have.¹⁰¹ They have the time and the ability to elicit sensitive, embarrassing and often humiliating evidence (e.g., family sexual abuse) that the defendant may have never disclosed. They have the clinical skills to recognize such things as congenital, mental or neurological conditions, to understand how these conditions may have affected the defendant's development and behavior, and to identify the most appropriate experts to examine the defendant or testify on his behalf.

Perhaps most critically, having a qualified mitigation specialist assigned to every capital case as an integral part of the defense team insures that the presentation to be made at the penalty phase is integrated into the overall preparation of the case rather than being hurriedly thrown together by defense counsel still in shock at the guilty verdict.¹⁰² The mitigation specialist compiles a comprehensive and well-documented psycho-social history of the client based on an exhaustive investigation; analyzes the significance of the information in terms of impact on development, including effect on personality and behavior; finds mitigating themes in the client's life history; identifies the need for expert assistance; assists in locating appropriate experts; provides social history information to experts to enable them to conduct competent and reliable evaluations; and works with the defense team and experts to develop a comprehensive and cohesive case in mitigation.¹⁰³

The mitigation specialist often plays an important role as well in maintaining close contact with the client and his family while the case is pending. The rapport developed in this process can be the key to persuading a client to accept a plea to a sentence less than death.¹⁰⁴

For all of these reasons the use of mitigation specialists has become "part of the existing 'standard of care'" in capital cases, ensuring "high quality investigation and preparation of the penalty phase."¹⁰⁵

Counsel Not Compensated by Public Funds

Finally, in the relatively rare case in which a capital defendant retains counsel, jurisdictions must ensure that the defendant has access to necessary investigative and expert services if the defendant cannot afford them. “Inability to afford counsel necessarily means that a defendant is unable to afford essential supporting services, such as investigative assistance and expert witnesses. The converse does not follow, however. Just because a defendant is able to afford retained counsel does not mean that sufficient finances are available for essential services. . . . Supporting services [should] be made available to the clients of retained counsel who are unable to afford the required assistance.”¹⁰⁶ Of course, the same observations apply where counsel is serving pro bono or, although originally retained, has simply run out of money.

jurisdictions routinely authorize the payment of funds for mitigation experts pursuant to state statute, court rule, case law or defense motion, e.g., South Carolina, S.C. Guideline 5.1 Qualifications of Defense Counsel

- A. The Responsible Agency should develop and publish qualification standards for defense counsel in capital cases. These standards should be construed and applied in such a way as to further the overriding goal of providing each client with high quality legal representation.
- B. In formulating qualification standards, the Responsible Agency should insure:
- 1. That every attorney representing a capital defendant has:
 - a. obtained a license or permission to practice in the jurisdiction;
 - b. demonstrated a commitment to providing zealous advocacy and high quality legal representation in the defense of capital cases; and
 - c. satisfied the training requirements set forth in Guideline 8.1.
 - 2. That the pool of defense attorneys as a whole is such that each capital defendant within the jurisdiction receives high quality legal representation. Accordingly, the qualification standards should insure that the pool includes sufficient numbers of attorneys who have demonstrated:
 - a. substantial knowledge and understanding of the relevant state, federal and international law, both procedural and substantive, governing capital cases;
 - b. skill in the management and conduct of complex negotiations and litigation;
 - c. skill in legal research, analysis, and the drafting of litigation documents;
 - d. skill in oral advocacy;
 - e. skill in the use of expert witnesses and familiarity with common areas of forensic investigation, including fingerprints, ballistics, forensic pathology, and DNA evidence;
 - f. skill in the investigation, preparation, and presentation of evidence bearing upon mental status;
 - g. skill in the investigation, preparation, and presentation of mitigating evidence; and
 - h. skill in the elements of trial advocacy, such as jury selection, cross-examination of witnesses, and opening and closing statements.

History of Guideline

This Guideline has been substantially reorganized for this edition. In the original edition, it emphasized quantitative measures of attorney experience – such as years of litigation experience and number of jury trials – as the basis for qualifying counsel to undertake representation in death penalty cases. In this revised edition, the inquiry focuses on counsel’s ability to provide high quality legal representation.

Commentary

Under Guideline 3.1, it is the duty of the Responsible Agency to provide capital defendants with attorneys who will give them high quality legal representation. This Guideline amplifies that duty. It is designed to be outcome-focused and to leave the Responsible Agency maximum flexibility. The Guideline sets forth the necessary qualifications for all attorneys (Subsection B (1)), and also requires that “the pool of defense attorneys as a whole is such that each capital defendant within the jurisdiction receives high quality legal representation.” (Subsection B (2)). The qualification standards set by the Responsible Agency must be such as to bring about this result.

This functional approach is new to this edition.

As described in the Commentary to Guideline 1.1, the abilities that death penalty defense counsel must possess in order to provide high quality legal representation differ from those required in any other area of law. Accordingly, quantitative measures of experience are not a sufficient basis to determine an attorney's qualifications for the task. An attorney with substantial prior experience in the representation of death penalty cases, but whose past performance does not represent the level of proficiency or commitment necessary for the adequate representation of a client in a capital case, should not be placed on the appointment roster.¹⁰⁷

There are also attorneys who do not possess substantial prior experience yet who will provide high quality legal representation in death penalty cases.¹⁰⁸ Such attorneys may have specialized training and experience in the field (e.g., as law professors), may previously have been prosecutors, or may have had substantial experience in civil practice.¹⁰⁹ These attorneys should receive appointments if the Responsible Agency is satisfied that the client will be provided with high quality legal representation by the defense team as a whole.

In order to make maximum use of the available resources in the legal community overall, the Responsible Agency needs to devise qualification standards that build upon the contribution that each lawyer can make to the defense team, while ensuring that the team is of such a size and aggregate level of experience as to be able to function effectively.

¹⁰⁷ See Bright, supra note 28, at 1871 n.209 (“Standards for the appointment of counsel, which are defined in terms of number of years in practice and number of trials, do very little to improve the quality of representation since many of the worst lawyers are those who have long taken criminal appointments and would meet the qualifications”).

¹⁰⁹ Superior post-conviction death penalty defense representation has often been provided by members of the private bar who did not have prior experience in the field but who did have a commitment to excellence. See, e.g., Kelly Choi, Against All Odds, THE AMERICAN LAWYER, Dec. 2000, at 98; Death-Row Rescue by Minnesota Life-Saving Lawyers, STAR TRIBUNE, Jan. 5, 2001, at 18A.

Guideline 6.1 Workload

The Responsible Agency should implement effectual mechanisms to ensure that the workload of attorneys representing defendants in death penalty cases is maintained at a level that enables counsel to provide each client with high quality legal representation in accordance with these Guidelines.

History of Guideline

The original edition of this Guideline stated that “attorneys accepting appointments pursuant to these Guidelines . . . should not accept appointment” if their workload would interfere with the provision of “quality representation or lead to the breach of professional obligations.”

Although that admonition has been retained in Guideline 10.3, this Guideline, which in accordance with Guideline 1.1 applies to all defense counsel (not just appointed members of the private bar), has been added to make clear that it is the responsibility of the jurisdiction creating the system to establish mechanisms for controlling attorney workloads.

Commentary

In order to achieve the goal of providing capital defendants with high quality legal representation, the caseloads of their attorneys must be such as to permit the investment of the extraordinary time and effort necessary to ensure effective and zealous representation in a capital case. As the ABA Defense Services Standards note:

One of the single most important impediments to the furnishing of quality defense services for the poor is the presence of excessive caseloads. All too often in defender organizations, attorneys are asked to provide representation in too many cases. Unfortunately, not even the most able and industrious lawyers can provide quality representation when their workloads are unmanageable. Excessive workloads, moreover, lead to attorney frustration, disillusionment by clients, and weakening of the adversary system.¹¹⁰

A numerical set of caseload standards for appointed counsel, standing alone, would not ensure high quality legal representation. While national caseload standards should in no event be exceeded, the concept of “workload” (i.e., caseload adjusted by factors such as case complexity, support services, and an attorney’s nonrepresentational duties) is a more accurate measurement of counsel’s ability to provide quality representation. In assessing appointed counsel’s workload, the Responsible Agency must also consider whether counsel has adequate access to essential support staff such as investigators, mitigation specialists, paralegals, and legal secretaries. Counsel’s workload, including legal cases and other work, should never be so large as to interfere with the rendering of quality representation or lead to the breach of ethical obligations, and counsel is obligated to decline to undertake additional cases above such levels.¹¹¹

In accordance with these principles, the Responsible Agency should assess the workload of eligible attorneys prior to appointment to ensure that counsel’s workload will enable counsel to provide high quality legal representation. To assist in assessing workloads, some defender offices have established workload guidelines that are useful in determining whether the workload of a particular attorney is excessive. These guidelines may be consulted as one measure of appropriate workloads.¹¹²

These standards all acknowledge the need to determine acceptable workloads, and all

Studies have consistently found that defending capital cases requires vastly more time and effort by counsel than noncapital matters. For example, a study of the California State Public Defender revealed that attorneys there spent, on average, four times as much time on capital representation as on cases with any other penalty, including those involving a maximum possible sentence of life imprisonment without parole.¹¹³ In terms of actual numbers of hours invested in the defense of capital cases, recent studies indicate that several thousand hours are typically required to provide appropriate representation. For example, an in-depth examination of federal capital trials from 1990 to 1997 conducted on behalf of the Judicial Conference of the United States found that the total attorney hours per representation in capital cases that actually proceeded to trial averaged 1,889.¹¹⁴

Workloads for lawyers handling direct appeals should also be maintained at levels that are consistent with providing high quality legal representation. Like the responsibilities of counsel at trial, appellate work in a capital case is time-consuming and difficult. A capital trial record, which appellate counsel must review in full and with care, typically runs to thousands or even tens of thousands of pages -- even before, pursuant to Guideline 10.7 (B) (2), counsel investigates the possibility that the record may be incomplete. Once appellate counsel has reviewed the record, he or she must conduct especially wide-ranging legal research, canvassing both state and federal judicial opinions, before drafting the opening brief. Given the gravity of the punishment, the unsettled state of the law, and the insistence of the courts on rigorous default rules, it is incumbent upon appellate counsel to raise every potential ground of error that might result in a reversal of the defendant's conviction or punishment.¹¹⁵ Further, counsel must aggressively examine the government's brief and research its legal assertions in order to prepare an adequate reply. Preparing for and presenting oral argument requires counsel to invest still more hours. In California, where the Office of the State Public Defender handled capital appeals in the California Supreme Court, a 1989 study concluded that attorneys handling such cases should be responsible for two to three briefs per year.¹¹⁶

acknowledge within the standards themselves or in commentary the myriad factors that must be considered in weighing workload. Only the National Advisory Commission sets forth suggested numerical maximums for caseloads; those numbers are provided with the caveat "that particular local conditions -- such as travel time -- may mean that lower limits are essential." The National Advisory Commission standard does not address death penalty workloads.

Similarly, the workloads of counsel handling collateral proceedings must be carefully limited to allow for high quality legal representation. A 1998 survey of the time and expenses required in Florida capital post-conviction cases concluded that “the most experienced and qualified lawyers at Florida’s post-conviction defender office, the Office of Capital Collateral Representation have estimated that, on average, over 3,300 lawyer hours are required to take a post-conviction death penalty case from the denial of certiorari by the United States Supreme Court following direct appeal to the denial of certiorari” through that state’s post-conviction proceedings.¹¹⁷

It is the duty of the Responsible Agency to distribute assignments in light of each attorney’s duty under the Rules of Professional Conduct to “provide competent representation to a client”¹¹⁸, which requires “the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation”¹¹⁹ necessary for a complex and specialized area of the law. Thus, the Responsible Agency must monitor private counsel in accordance with Guideline 7.1, and provide them with additional assistance as necessary. And the Independent Authority must monitor the defender organizations of the jurisdiction and stand ready to supplement their resources with those of the private bar.

Regardless of the context, no system that involves burdening attorneys with more cases than they can reasonably handle can provide high quality legal representation. In the capital context, no such system is acceptable.

Guideline 7.1 Monitoring; Removal

- A. The Responsible Agency should monitor the performance of all defense counsel to ensure that the client is receiving high quality legal representation. Where there is evidence that an attorney is not providing high quality legal representation, the Responsible Agency should take appropriate action to protect the interests of the attorney’s current and potential clients.

- B. The Responsible Agency should establish and publicize a regular procedure for investigating and resolving any complaints made by judges, clients, attorneys, or others that defense counsel failed to provide high quality legal representation.

- C. The Responsible Agency should periodically review the rosters of attorneys who have been certified to accept appointments in capital cases to ensure that those attorneys remain capable of providing high quality legal representation. Where there is evidence that an attorney has failed to provide high quality legal representation, the attorney should not receive additional appointments and should be removed from the roster. Where there is evidence that a systemic defect in a defender office has caused the office to fail to provide high quality legal representation, the office should not receive additional appointments.

- D. Before taking final action making an attorney or a defender office ineligible to receive additional appointments, the Responsible Agency should provide written notice that such action is being contemplated, and give the attorney or defender office opportunity to respond in writing.

- E. An attorney or defender office sanctioned pursuant to this Guideline should be restored to the roster only in exceptional circumstances.

- F. The Responsible Agency should ensure that this Guideline is implemented consistently with Guideline 2.1(C), so that an attorney’s zealous representation of a client cannot be cause for the imposition or threatened imposition of sanctions pursuant to this Guideline.

History of Guideline

In the original edition, this Guideline provided that an attorney should receive no additional capital appointments if counsel had “inexcusably ignored basic responsibilities of an effective lawyer, resulting in prejudice to the client’s case.” In this edition, the standard has been changed to prohibit future appointment where counsel “has failed to provide high quality legal representation.” The change was made because the former language was considered insufficiently stringent. Subsection B is based on Commentary to the original edition of the Guideline. Subsections C–E are taken from Subsections A and C of the original edition of the Guideline. Subsection F is new and is intended to emphasize the importance of the principle enunciated in Guideline 2.1(C).

Commentary

Consistent with its duty to ensure that high quality legal assistance is afforded to indigent capital defendants, the Responsible Agency should monitor the performance of all capital defense counsel, including defender offices. “Admittedly, this is not an easy task and there obviously are difficulties present in having third parties scrutinize the judgments of private counsel. On the other hand, the difficulty of the task should not be an excuse to do nothing.”¹²⁰

While the Responsible Agency should investigate and maintain records regarding any complaints made against assigned counsel by judges, clients and other attorneys,¹²¹ an effective attorney-monitoring program in death penalty matters should go considerably beyond these activities. The performance of each assigned lawyer should be subject to systematic review based upon publicized standards and procedures.¹²² Counsel should be removed from the roster when counsel has failed to represent a client consistently with these Guidelines.¹²³

In fulfilling its monitoring function, the Responsible Agency should not attempt to micro-manage counsel’s work;¹²⁴ most lawyering tasks may reasonably be performed in a variety of ways. In order to preserve the nature of the attorney-client relationship, counsel for the accused must have the freedom to represent their client as they deem professionally appropriate. Clients, moreover, should have the right to continue satisfactory relationships with lawyers in whom they have reposed their confidence and trust. Rather, the responsibility of the Responsible Agency is to ensure that, overall, the attorney is providing high quality legal representation. Where counsel fails to do so, whether because of a mental or physical impairment,¹²⁵ or for any other reason, the ¹²³ The standard for denying additional appointments to death penalty lawyers should be more strictly applied than the standard for denying additional appointments in non-capital cases. In non-capital criminal cases, the standard provides that “where there is compelling evidence that an attorney consistently has ignored basic responsibilities, the attorney’s name should be removed from the roster after notice and hearing, with the possibility of reinstatement after removal if adequate demonstration of remedial measures is shown.” ABA STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE: PROVIDING DEFENSE SERVICES Standard 5-2.3 cmt. (3d ed. 1992) (emphasis added). As these Guidelines make clear, low quality representation of a capital defendant may have irrevocable consequences. Accordingly, the Responsible Agency should not wait for an attorney to “consistently ignore basic responsibilities.”

¹²⁴ See ABA STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE: PROVIDING DEFENSE SERVICES Standard 5-1.3 cmt. (3d ed. 1992).

¹²⁵ It cannot always be safely assumed that counsel who has been determined to be qualified based on past performance will represent current or future clients satisfactorily. Circumstances can change. For example, the attorney may begin suffering from illness, chemical dependency or other handicap unknown to the appointing authority, the court or the client. See Kirshmeier, supra note 28, at, 455-60 (discussing cases in which defendants were represented by lawyers who were Responsible Agency should intervene. This may occur on the Responsible Agency's own motion or as a result of a request by the defendant or the court.¹²⁶

In keeping with the paramount objective of protecting the rights and interests of the defendant, Subsection E provides that the Responsible Agency should have a regularized procedure for investigating and resolving complaints of inadequate representation. The procedure should recognize that many people (e.g., family members of the client, witnesses whom the attorney has interviewed or not interviewed) may be in a position to provide important information. The procedure should be publicized accordingly.

The Responsible Agency must monitor cases, and take appropriate action in the event of any substandard performance. If the jurisdiction has defender organizations, the Independent Authority monitoring them must review such problems with an eye towards rectifying both deficiencies on the part of individual staff lawyers and any structural flaws that those deficiencies may reveal. If inadequate training, office workload, or some other systemic problem has resulted in representation of lower quality than required by these Guidelines and the situation is not corrected, the Independent Authority should remove the office from the roster.

Because of the unique and irrevocable nature of the death penalty, counsel or offices that have been removed from the roster should be readmitted only upon exceptional assurances that no further dereliction of duty will occur. The Responsible Agency should not readmit counsel or the office to the roster unless it determines that the original removal was in error, or finds by clear and convincing evidence that the problem which led to the removal of counsel or the office has been identified and corrected. It may condition readmission on specific actions (e.g., proof of reduction in workload, proof of additional training and/or experience, substance abuse counseling, or correction of systemic defects in an office).

intoxicated, abusing drugs, or mentally ill).

The adversary nature of the proceedings does not relieve the trial judge of the obligation of raising on his or her initiative, at all appropriate times and in an appropriate manner, matters which may significantly promote a just determination of the trial.”).

- D. The Legal Representation Plan should insure that all non-attorneys wishing to be eligible to participate on defense teams receive continuing professional education appropriate to their areas of expertise.

History of Guideline

The importance of training was addressed in Guideline 9.1 of the original version of the Guidelines for lawyers seeking to receive appointments in capital cases. Subsections A and D have been added to this revised edition to emphasize that the Legal Representation Plan must provide for specialized training of all members of the defense team involved in the representation of capital defendants. Subsections B and C are based on the original edition of the Guideline. This revised edition of the Guideline has been amended to emphasize that qualified training programs must be “comprehensive” in scope. Thus the eleven areas of training set forth in Subsection B are new and are intended to indicate the broad range of topics that must be covered in order for an initial training program to meet minimum requirements. The requirement of participation in a continuing legal education program every two years is also a minimum; many capital defense counsel have discovered that they must attend training programs more frequently in order to provide effective legal representation.

Commentary

As indicated in the Commentary to Guideline 1.1, providing high quality legal representation in capital cases requires unique skills. Accordingly, the standard of practice requires that counsel have received comprehensive specialized training before being considered qualified to undertake representation in a death penalty case.¹²⁷ Such training must not be confined to instruction in the substantive law and procedure applicable to legal representation of capital defendants, but must extend to related substantive areas of mitigation and forensic science. In addition, comprehensive training programs must include practical instruction in advocacy skills, as well as presentations by experienced practitioners.

Once an attorney has been deemed qualified to accept appointments in capital cases, the standard of practice requires counsel to regularly receive formal training in order to keep abreast of the field.¹²⁸ Continuing legal education, which is required by many state bars as a matter of course for all attorneys, is critically important to capital defense attorneys. As the Commentary to Guideline 1.1 indicates, they must not only have mastery of current developments in law, forensics, and related areas, but also be able to anticipate future ones.¹²⁹

In recognition of the central role that ongoing training plays in the provision of effective capital defense representation, a number of professional organizations, including the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, the Habeas Assistance Project, the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc., the office of the Kentucky Public Advocate, and the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, have regularly devoted significant resources to providing educational programs of the quality contemplated by this Guideline.

¹²⁸ As one authority has noted, capital defense counsel must exhibit “constant vigilance in keeping abreast of new developments in a volatile and highly nuanced area of the law.” Vick, supra note 3, at 358.

Guideline 9.1 Funding and Compensation

- A. The Legal Representation Plan must ensure funding for the full cost of high quality legal representation, as defined by these Guidelines, by the defense team and outside experts selected by counsel.

- B. Counsel in death penalty cases should be fully compensated at a rate that is commensurate with the provision of high quality legal representation and reflects the extraordinary responsibilities inherent in death penalty representation.
 - 1. Flat fees, caps on compensation, and lump-sum contracts are improper in death penalty cases.

 - 2. Attorneys employed by defender organizations should be compensated according to a salary scale that is commensurate with the salary scale of the prosecutor’s office in the jurisdiction.

 - 3. Appointed counsel should be fully compensated for actual time and service performed at an hourly rate commensurate with the prevailing rates for similar services performed by retained counsel in the jurisdiction, with no distinction between rates for services performed in or out of court. Periodic billing and payment should be available.

- C. Non-attorney members of the defense team should be fully compensated at a rate that is commensurate with the provision of high quality legal representation and reflects the specialized skills needed by those who assist counsel with the litigation of death penalty cases.
 - 1. Investigators employed by defender organizations should be compensated according to a salary scale that is commensurate with the salary scale of the prosecutor’s office in the jurisdiction.

 - 2. Mitigation specialists and experts employed by defender organizations should be compensated according to a salary scale that is commensurate with the salary scale for comparable expert services in the private sector.

 - 3. Members of the defense team assisting private counsel should be fully compensated for actual time and service performed at an hourly rate commensurate with prevailing rates paid by retained counsel in the jurisdiction for similar services, with no distinction between rates for services performed in or out of court. Periodic billing and payment should be available.

- D. Additional compensation should be provided in unusually protracted or extraordinary cases.

- E. Counsel and members of the defense team should be fully reimbursed for reasonable incidental expenses.

History of Guideline

This Guideline was Guideline 10.1 in the original edition. The express disapproval of flat or fixed fee compensation provisions and statutory fee maximums is new to this edition. The provision is in keeping with Guideline 10.1(A) of the original edition, which mandates that counsel be fully compensated at a reasonable hourly rate of compensation, and follows the Commentary to Standard 5-2.4 of the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice: Providing Defense Services, which observes that “[t]he possible effect of such rates is to discourage lawyers from doing more than what is minimally necessary to qualify for the flat payment.” Subsection B (2) is new to the Guideline and has been added to provide for compensation of attorneys employed by defender organizations. Subsection B (3) is based on the original edition of the Guideline, but a provision has been added indicating that there should be no distinction between the hourly rates of compensation for services performed in or out of court. Subsection C is new to this edition and provides for compensation of the other members of the defense team. Subsection D is new to this edition. Subsection E is based on the original edition.

Commentary

In order to fulfill its constitutional obligation to provide effective legal representation for poor people charged with crimes,¹³⁰ “[g]overnment has the responsibility to fund the full cost of quality legal representation.”¹³¹ This means that it must “firmly and unhesitatingly resolve any conflicts between the treasury and the fundamental constitutional rights in favor of the latter.”¹³²

As Subsection A of this Guideline emphasizes, each jurisdiction is responsible for paying not just the direct compensation of members of the defense team, but also the costs involved in meeting the requirements of these Guidelines for high quality legal representation (e.g., Guideline 4.1, Guideline 8.1).

As a rough benchmark, jurisdictions should provide funding for defender services that maintains parity between the defense and the prosecution with respect to workload, salaries, and resources necessary to provide quality legal representation (including benefits, technology, facilities, legal research, support staff, paralegals, investigators, mitigation specialists, and access to forensic services and experts). In doing so, jurisdictions must be mindful that the prosecution has access at no cost to many services for which the defense must pay. A prosecution office will not only benefit from the formal resources of its jurisdiction (e.g., a state crime laboratory) and cooperating ones (e.g., the FBI), but from many informal ones as well. For example, a prosecutor seeking to locate a witness in a distant city can frequently enlist the assistance of a local police department; defense counsel will have to pay to send out an investigator. Yet funding for defense services usually lags far behind prosecution funding.¹³³

In particular, compensation of attorneys for death penalty representation remains notoriously inadequate.¹³⁴ As Justice Blackmun observed in 1994:

[C]ompensation for attorneys representing indigent capital defendants often is perversely low. Although a properly conducted capital trial can involve hundreds of hours of investigation, preparation, and lengthy trial proceedings, many States severely limit the compensation paid for capital defense. . . . As a result, attorneys appointed to represent capital defendants at the trial level frequently are unable to recoup even their overhead costs and out-of-pocket expenses, and effectively may be required to work at minimum wage or below while funding from their own pockets their client's defense.¹³⁵

Low fees make it economically unattractive for competent attorneys to seek assignments and to expend the time and effort a case may require. A 1993 study of capital representation in Texas, for example, showed that “more experienced private criminal attorneys are refusing to accept court appointments in capital cases because of the time involved, the substantial infringement on their private practices, the lack of compensation for counsel fees and expert services and the enormous pressure that they feel in handling these cases.”¹³⁶ Similarly, a survey of Mississippi attorneys appointed to represent indigent defendants in capital cases found that 82% would either refuse or be very reluctant to accept another appointment because of financial considerations.¹³⁷ A 1998 study of federal death penalty cases reported that “[a]lthough the hourly rate of compensation in federal capital cases are higher than those paid noncapital federal criminal addition to actual overhead and expenses. Contracts with private attorneys for public defense services should never be let primarily on the basis of cost; they should specify performance requirements and the anticipated workload, provide an overflow or funding mechanism for excess, unusual or complex cases, and separately fund expert, investigative, and other litigation support services. No part of the justice system should be expanded or the workload increased without consideration of the impact that expansion will have on the balance and on the other components of the justice system. Public defense should participate as an equal partner in improving the justice system. This principle assumes that the prosecutor is adequately funded and supported in all respects, so that securing parity will mean that defense counsel is able to provide quality legal representation.”).

cases, they are quite low in comparison to hourly rates for lawyers generally, and to the imputed hourly cost of office overhead.”¹³⁸

While compensation is generally inadequate for representation at trial, it is even worse – and indeed, in a number of jurisdictions, nonexistent – for representation in state collateral proceedings.¹³⁹ Recent studies have estimated that thousands of attorney hours are required to represent a death-sentenced prisoner in such cases.¹⁴⁰ Not surprisingly, few attorneys are willing to take on this responsibility for negligible compensation. As a result, a substantial and growing number of condemned inmates who have completed direct review are without legal representation.¹⁴¹

It is such inmates – and the justice system – rather than lawyers (who can always move to more lucrative fields) that are victimized when jurisdictions fail to fulfill their financial responsibilities. What is “most important [is that] the quality of the representation often suffers when adequate compensation for counsel is not available.”¹⁴² This is not a merely theoretical concern. It is demonstrably the case that, by discouraging more experienced criminal defense lawyers from accepting appointments in capital cases, inadequate compensation has often left capital defense representation to inexperienced or outright incompetent counsel. A series of studies in several death penalty states have found that appointed counsel in death penalty cases have been subject to professional disciplinary action at significantly higher rates than other lawyers.¹⁴³

These realities underlie the mandate of this guideline that members of the death penalty defense team be fully compensated at a rate commensurate with the provision of high quality legal representation. The Guideline’s strong disapproval of so-called “flat fees,” statutory caps, and other arbitrary limitations on attorney compensation is based upon the adverse effect such schemes have upon effective representation.¹⁴⁴ Rather, compensation should be based on the number of hours expended plus the effort, efficiency, and skill of counsel.¹⁴⁵ When assigned counsel is paid a predetermined fee for the case regardless of the number of hours of work actually demanded by the representation, there is an unacceptable risk that counsel will limit the amount of time invested in the representation in order to maximize the return on the fixed fee.¹⁴⁶

Moreover, any compensation system that fails to reflect the extraordinary responsibilities and commitment required of counsel in death penalty cases,¹⁴⁷ that does not provide for extra payments to counsel when unusually burdensome representation is provided, or that does not provide for the periodic payment of fees, will not succeed in obtaining the high quality legal representation required by these Guidelines.

For better or worse, a system for the provision of defense services in capital cases will get what it pays for.¹⁴⁸

Commentary

The Structure of Guideline 10

Guideline 10 mandates the establishment of performance standards designed to insure the provision of high quality legal representation. Compliance with Guideline 10 may therefore be relevant to a determination as to whether a jurisdiction meets the requirements of Chapter 154 of the AEDPA, which provides governments with procedural advantages if they choose to establish effectual mechanisms “for the appointment, compensation, and payment of reasonable litigation expenses of competent counsel in State post-conviction proceedings” brought by indigent capital prisoners, and “provide standards of competency for the appointment of such counsel.”¹⁴⁹

¹⁴⁹ 28 U.S.C. § 2261(b). The standards of other Guidelines, e.g., Guideline 2.1 (Legal Representation Plan), Guideline 5.1 (Qualifications of Counsel), Guideline 7.1 (Monitoring), and

Guideline 10.1 directs the Responsible Agency to promulgate performance standards. Guidelines 10.2–10.15.1 contain specific standards that should be included in any set of performance standards. They do not constitute a complete set of performance standards, however. They address only those aspects of defense representation in which death penalty cases differ from other types of criminal cases¹⁵⁰ and omit those that are applicable to the defense of criminal cases generally. Such standards should, however, also be included in the set established by the Responsible Agency, with the understanding that in capital cases the acceptable level of adherence to those standards must be higher than in non-capital ones. “Death is different,”¹⁵¹ and, as discussed in the Commentary to Guideline 1.1, death penalty cases have become so specialized that defense counsel in such cases have duties and functions definably different from those of counsel in ordinary criminal cases. At every stage of a capital case, counsel must be aware of specialized and frequently changing legal principles and rules, become educated regarding a wide range of mental health issues and scientific technologies, and be able to develop strategies for applying them in the pressure-filled environment of high-stakes, complex litigation. The level of attorney competence that may be tolerable in noncapital cases¹⁵² can be fatally inadequate in capital ones.¹⁵³ The standards of performance established under this Guideline should accordingly

Guideline 9.1 (Compensation and Funding), should also guide the determination as to whether a jurisdiction has “opted in” to Chapter 154.

¹⁵¹ See, e.g., Gardner v. Florida, 430 U.S. 349, 357-358 (1977) (plurality opinion).

¹⁵² For general standards regarding the performance of criminal defense counsel, see ABA STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE: DEFENSE FUNCTION Standard 4, in ABA STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE: PROSECUTION FUNCTION AND DEFENSE FUNCTION (3d ed. 1993); INSTITUTE OF JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION/AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION JUVENILE JUSTICE STANDARDS ANNOTATED, STANDARDS RELATING TO COUNSEL FOR PRIVATE PARTIES (1979); and NAT’L LEGAL AID & DEFENDER ASS’N, PERFORMANCE GUIDELINES FOR CRIMINAL DEFENSE REPRESENTATION (1997).

insure that all aspects of the representation conform to the special standard of practice applicable to capital cases.¹⁵⁴

Consistent with the overall purpose of these Guidelines¹⁵⁵ the specific standards of Guidelines 10.2-15.2 are intended to describe appropriate professional conduct. Compliance with those standards may therefore be relevant in the judicial evaluation of the performance of defense counsel to determine the validity of a capital conviction or death sentence.¹⁵⁶ They should in any event be utilized by the Responsible Agency in determining the eligibility of counsel for appointment or reappointment to capital cases and when monitoring the performance of counsel.¹⁵⁷

¹⁵⁴ The standards established by the Responsible Agency should clearly state that performance in the capital context should be measured with reference to the special expertise required in capital cases. See, e.g., State v. Davis, 116 N.J. 341, 355, 561 A.2d 1082, 1089 (N.J. 1989); NEBRASKA COMM’N ON PUB. ADVOCACY, STANDARDS FOR INDIGENT DEFENSE SERVICES IN CAPITAL AND NON-CAPITAL CASES. Review by the Responsible Agency should likewise be intensified, compared to the scrutiny that might be given under a system to appoint counsel in non-capital cases. See, e.g., text accompanying note 123 supra.

¹⁵⁵ See supra Guideline 1.1(A).

¹⁵⁶ See, e.g., Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 396 (2000) (citing ABA STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE 4-4.1 cmt. at 4-55 (2d ed. 1980) for proposition that “trial counsel [in a capital case have an] obligation to conduct a thorough investigation of the defendant’s background,” and concluding that defense counsel performed deficiently in failing to conduct a diligent investigation into his client’s background).

The Supreme Court has stated that the “existence [of a death penalty statute] on the statute books provide[s] fair warning as to the degree of culpability which the State ascribes to the act of murder.”¹⁵⁸ In accordance with Guideline 1.1 (B), once a client is detained under circumstances in which the death penalty is legally possible, counsel should proceed as if it will be sought.

As described in the text accompanying footnotes 12-13 supra, early investigation to determine weaknesses in the State’s case and uncover mitigating evidence is a necessity, and should not be put off in the hope that the death penalty will not be requested, or that the request will be dropped at a later point.¹⁵⁹ Moreover, early investigation may uncover mitigating

Second Judicial Dist. Court*, 11 P.3d 1209, 1211, 1215 (Nev. 2000) (concluding trial court acted within its discretion in denying prosecution motion for leave to file untimely notice of intent to seek death penalty; defense opposed motion). In accordance with the text accompanying notes 4 through 8 supra, counsel should be mindful of the possibility that it may be appropriate to pursue the challenge through some collateral proceeding (e.g., application for a writ of prohibition).

Commentary

It is each attorney's duty under the Model Rules of Professional Responsibility neither to accept employment when it would "jeopardize the lawyer's ability to render competent representation"¹⁶⁴ nor to handle cases without "adequate preparation."¹⁶⁵ Applying these professional norms to the special context of defense representation in death penalty cases, this Guideline mandates that attorneys maintain a workload consistent with the provision of high quality legal representation, bearing in mind the considerations discussed in the Commentary to Guideline 6.1

Once having agreed to represent a capital client, counsel should control their overall workload so as to be able to do so effectively. Counsel who determine, in the exercise of best professional judgment, that accepting new cases or continuing with old ones will lead to providing capital defense representation of less than high quality should take such steps as may be appropriate to reduce pending or projected caseloads, such as seeking assistance from the Responsible Agency, refusing further cases and moving to withdraw from existing cases.

In short, an attorney whose workload threatens to cause a breach of his or her obligations under these Guidelines has a duty to take corrective action. Counsel in that situation may not simply attempt to muddle through.

Guideline 10.4 The Defense Team

- A. When it is responsible for designating counsel to defend a capital case, the Responsible Agency should designate a lead counsel and one or more associate counsel. The Responsible Agency should ordinarily solicit the views of lead counsel before designating associate counsel.

- B. Lead counsel bears overall responsibility for the performance of the defense team, and should allocate, direct, and supervise its work in accordance with these Guidelines and professional standards.
 - 1. Subject to the foregoing, lead counsel may delegate to other members of the defense team duties imposed by these Guidelines, unless:
 - a. The Guideline specifically imposes the duty on “lead counsel,” or
 - b. The Guideline specifically imposes the duty on “all counsel” or “all members of the defense team.”

- C. As soon as possible after designation, lead counsel should assemble a defense team by:
 - 1. Consulting with the Responsible Agency regarding the number and identity of the associate counsel;
 - 2. Subject to standards of the Responsible Agency that are in accord with these Guidelines and in consultation with associate counsel to the extent practicable, selecting and making any appropriate contractual agreements with non-attorney team members in such a way that the team includes:
 - a. at least one mitigation specialist and one fact investigator;
 - b. at least one member qualified by training and experience to screen individuals for the presence of mental or psychological disorders or impairments; and
 - c. any other members needed to provide high quality legal representation.

- D. Counsel should demand on behalf of the client all resources necessary to provide high quality legal representation. If such resources are denied, counsel should make an adequate record to preserve the issue for post-conviction review.

Commentary

As reflected in Guideline 4.1 and the accompanying Commentary, the provision of high quality legal representation in capital cases requires a team approach that combines the different skills, experience, and perspectives of several disciplines.¹⁶⁶ The team approach enhances the quality of representation by expanding the knowledge base available to prepare and present the case, increases efficiency by allowing attorneys to delegate many time-consuming tasks to skilled assistants and focus on the legal issues in the case,¹⁶⁷ improves the relationship with the client and his family by providing more avenues of communication, and provides more support to individual team members.¹⁶⁸

This Guideline contemplates that the Responsible Agency will ordinarily¹⁶⁹ begin by designating lead counsel for a particular case and then, in consultation with that counsel, designate one or more associate counsel.¹⁷⁰ As described in Subsection B, the role of lead counsel is to direct the work of the defense team in such a way that, overall, it provides high quality legal representation in accordance with these Guidelines and professional standards. Accordingly, lead counsel is free to allocate the duties imposed by these Guidelines to appropriate members of the defense team, with two exceptions: (1) duties (such as the one contained in Subsection C) that are specifically imposed on “lead counsel,” and (2) duties (such as the one contained in Guideline 10.13) that are specifically imposed on “all counsel” or “all members of the defense team.”

After designation, lead counsel should assemble the rest of the defense team. The Responsible Agency should give lead counsel maximum flexibility in this regard. For example, ¹⁶⁶ See TEXAS DEATH PENALTY MITIGATION MANUAL, supra note 103.

¹⁶⁷ See Mahoney v. Pataki, 98 N.Y.2d 45, 54, 772 N.E.2d 1118, 1123 (2002).

¹⁶⁸ TEXAS DEATH PENALTY MITIGATION MANUAL, supra note 103.

¹⁶⁹ This term is meant to accommodate the variety of exigent circumstances under which the provision of high quality legal representation might require a different procedure. For example, the client may be so situated that the professionally responsible course is to have a relatively junior attorney deal with the immediate situation, designating lead counsel subsequently. Or the client might insist on having a particular retained or pro bono attorney involved in the representation.

¹⁷⁰ Cf. N.Y. JUD. LAW § 35-b(2) (McKinney 2002) (“With respect to counsel at trial and at a separate sentencing proceeding, the court shall appoint two attorneys, one to be designated ‘lead’ counsel and the other to be designated ‘associated’ counsel.”); Cal. Rules of Ct., R. 4.117(c)(1) (effective Jan. 1, 2003) (“If the court appoints more than one attorney, one must be designated lead counsel and . . . at least one other must be designated associate counsel.”). Because the Responsible Agency has a continuing duty to monitor the performance of the defense team to insure that it is providing high quality legal representation at every stage of the case (Guideline 7.1), the Responsible Agency may appropriately change these designations to reflect developments in the case (e.g., it moves to a new post-conviction stage, or lead counsel becomes ill).

counsel should structure the team in such a way as to distinguish between experts who will play a “consulting” role, serving as part of the defense team covered by the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine, and experts who will be called to testify, thereby waiving such protections.¹⁷¹ This may well require, in the words of the Guideline, “appropriate contractual arrangements,” Subsection C (2).

However, Subsection C (2) provides that the Responsible Agency may impose standards on the composition of the defense team that are in accord with these Guidelines. Examples would include a requirement that a staff attorney of a defender organization utilize in-house resources in the first instance, that compensation levels be limited to levels consistent with Guideline 9.1(C), or that non-attorneys meet appropriate professional qualifications.

The defense team should include at least two attorneys, a fact investigator, and a mitigation specialist. The roles of these individuals are more fully described in the commentaries to Guidelines 1.1 and Guideline 4.1. In addition, as also described in the Commentary to Guideline 4.1, the team must have a member (who may be one of the foregoing or an additional person) with the necessary qualifications to screen individuals (the client in the first instance, but possibly family members as the mitigation investigation progresses) for mental or psychological disorders or defects and to recommend such further investigation of the subject as may seem appropriate.

The team described in the foregoing paragraph is the minimum. In many cases, more than two attorneys are necessary – for example, a specialist to assist with motions practice and record preservation, or an attorney who is particularly knowledgeable about an area of scientific evidence.¹⁷² As discussed in the Commentary to Guideline 4.1, because mental health issues pervade capital cases a psychologist or other mental health expert may well be a needed member of the defense team. As the Commentary to Guideline 4.1 also discusses, additional expert assistance specific to the case will almost always be necessary for an effective defense.

Lead counsel is responsible, in the exercise of sound professional judgment, for determining what resources are needed and for demanding that the jurisdiction provide them. Because the defense should not be required to disclose privileged communications or strategy to the prosecution in order to secure these resources,¹⁷³ counsel should insist on making such requests ex parte and in camera.¹⁷⁴

Guideline 10.5 Relationship with the Client

- A. Counsel at all stages of the case should make every appropriate effort to establish a relationship of trust with the client, and should maintain close contact with the client.

- B.
 - 1. Barring exceptional circumstances, an interview of the client should be conducted within 24 hours of initial counsel’s entry into the case.

 - 2. Promptly upon entry into the case, initial counsel should communicate in an appropriate manner with both the client and the government regarding the protection of the client’s rights against self-incrimination, to the effective assistance of counsel, and to preservation of the attorney-client privilege and similar safeguards.

 - 3. Counsel at all stages of the case should re-advise the client and the government regarding these matters as appropriate.

- C. Counsel at all stages of the case should engage in a continuing interactive dialogue with the client concerning all matters that might reasonably be expected to have a material impact on the case, such as:
 - 1. the progress of and prospects for the factual investigation, and what assistance the client might provide to it;

 - 2. current or potential legal issues;

 - 3. the development of a defense theory;

 - 4. presentation of the defense case;

 - 5. potential agreed-upon dispositions of the case;

 - 6. litigation deadlines and the projected schedule of case-related events; and

 - 7. relevant aspects of the client’s relationship with correctional, parole, or other governmental agents (e.g., prison medical providers or state psychiatrists).

History of Guideline

This Guideline collects, and slightly expands upon, material that was found in Guidelines 11.4.2, 11.6.1, and 11.8.3 of the original edition. The major revisions make this standard apply to all stages of a capital case and note expressly counsel’s obligation to discuss potential dispositions of the case with the client.

Commentary

The Problem

Immediate contact with the client is necessary not only to gain information needed to secure evidence and crucial witnesses, but also to try to prevent uncounseled confessions or admissions and to begin to establish a relationship of trust with the client.

Anyone who has just been arrested and charged with capital murder is likely to be in a state of extreme anxiety. Many capital defendants are, in addition, severely impaired in ways that make effective communication difficult: they may have mental illnesses or personality disorders that make them highly distrustful or impair their reasoning and perception of reality; they may be mentally retarded or have other cognitive impairments that affect their judgment and understanding; they may be depressed and even suicidal; or they may be in complete denial in the face of overwhelming evidence. In fact, the prevalence of mental illness and impaired reasoning is so high in the capital defendant population that “[i]t must be assumed that the client is emotionally and intellectually impaired.”¹⁷⁶ There will also often be significant cultural and/or language barriers between the client and his lawyers. In many cases, a mitigation specialist, social worker or other mental health expert can help identify and overcome these barriers, and assist counsel in establishing a rapport with the client.

¹⁷⁶ See Rick Kammen & Lee Norton, Plea Agreements: Working with Capital Defendants, THE ADVOCATE, Mar. 2000, at 31, available at <http://www.dpa.state.ky.us/library/advocate/mar00/plea.html>; see also Lewis, supra note 91, at 840 (finding 40% of death row inmates to be chronically psychotic); Dorothy O. Lewis et al., Neuropsychiatric, psychoeducational, and family characteristics of 14 juveniles condemned to death in the United States, 145 AM. J. PSYCHIATRY 584, 585 (1988) (finding 50% of death sentenced juveniles in survey suffered from psychosis and all were severely abused as children).

Counsel's Duty

Although ongoing communication by non-attorney members of the defense team is important, it does not discharge the obligation of counsel at every stage of the case to keep the client informed of developments and progress in the case, and to consult with the client on strategic and tactical matters. Some decisions require the client's knowledge and agreement;¹⁷⁷ others, which may be made by counsel, should nonetheless be fully discussed with the client beforehand.

Establishing a relationship of trust with the client is essential both to overcome the client's natural resistance to disclosing the often personal and painful facts necessary to present an effective penalty phase defense, as discussed in the text accompanying notes 101-04 supra, and to ensure that the client will listen to counsel's advice on important matters such as whether to testify and the advisability of a plea.¹⁷⁸ Client contact must be ongoing. An occasional hurried interview with the client will not reveal to counsel all the facts needed to prepare for trial, appeal, post-conviction review, or clemency. Similarly, a client will not – with good reason – trust a lawyer who visits only a few times before trial, does not send or reply to correspondence in a timely manner, or refuses to take telephone calls. It is also essential for the defense team to develop a relationship of trust with the client's family or others on whom the client relies for support and advice.

Often, so-called “difficult” clients are the consequence of bad lawyering – either in the past or present.¹⁷⁹ Simply treating the client with respect, listening and responding to his concerns, and keeping him informed about the case will often go a long way towards eliciting confidence and cooperation.¹⁸⁰

¹⁷⁸ See ABA STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE: DEFENSE FUNCTION Standard 4-5.2 & cmt., in ABA STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE: PROSECUTION FUNCTION AND DEFENSE FUNCTION (3d ed. 1993). See also Kevin M. Doyle, Heart of the Deal: Ten Suggestions for Plea Bargaining, THE CHAMPION, Nov. 1999, at 68 (counsel should not expect client to accept plea bargain unless opinion is founded on experience and leg work investigating the case); White, supra note 2, at 371, 374 (thorough investigation and relationship of trust key to persuading client to accept appropriate plea offer).

¹⁷⁹ See White, supra note 2, at 338 (“Often, capital defendants have had bad prior experiences with appointed attorneys, leading them to view such attorneys as ‘part of the system’ rather than advocates who will represent their interests. Appointed capital defense attorneys sometimes exacerbate this perception by harshly criticizing their clients’ conduct or making it clear that they are reluctant to represent them. A capital defendant who experiences, or previously has experienced, these kinds of judgments understandably will be reluctant to trust his attorney.”).

Overcoming barriers to communication and establishing a rapport with the client are critical to effective representation. Even apart from the need to obtain vital information,¹⁸¹ the lawyer must understand the client and his life history.¹⁸² To communicate effectively on the client's behalf in negotiating a plea, addressing a jury, arguing to a post-conviction court, or urging clemency, counsel must be able to humanize the defendant. That cannot be done unless the lawyer knows the inmate well enough to be able to convey a sense of truly caring what happens to him.¹⁸³

Counsel's Duties Respecting Uncooperative Clients

Some clients will initially insist that they want to be executed – as punishment or because they believe they would rather die than spend the rest of their lives in prison; some clients will want to contest their guilt but not present mitigation. It is ineffective assistance for counsel to simply acquiesce to such wishes, which usually reflect overwhelming feelings of guilt or despair rather than a rational decision.¹⁸⁴ Counsel should initially try to identify the source of the client's hopelessness. Counsel should consult lawyers, clergy or others who have worked with similarly situated death row inmates. Counsel should try to obtain treatment for the client's mental and/or emotional problems, which may become worse over time. One or more members of the defense team should always be available to talk to the client; members of the client's family, friends, or clergy might also be enlisted to talk to the client about the reasons for living; inmates who have accepted pleas or been on death row and later received a life sentence (or now wish they had), may also be a valuable source of information about the possibility of making a constructive life in prison. A client who insists on his innocence should be reminded that a waiver of mitigation will not persuade an appellate court of his innocence, and securing a life sentence may bar the state from seeking death in the event of a new trial.¹⁸⁵

ASS'N, DEFENDING A CAPITAL CASE IN FLORIDA 25 (2001). Accordingly, such advocacy is an appropriate part of the role of defense counsel in a capital case. Indeed, a lawyer who displays a greater concern with habeas corpus doctrine than with recovering the radio that prison authorities have confiscated from the client is unlikely to develop the sort of a relationship that will lead to a satisfactory legal outcome.

¹⁸¹ One important example is the fact that the client is mentally retarded – a fact that the client may conceal with great skill, see, e.g., James W. Ellis & Ruth A. Luckasson, Mentally Retarded Criminal Defendants, 53 GEO. WASH. L. REV. 414, 484-86 (1985), but one which counsel absolutely must know. See Atkins v. Virginia, 122 S. Ct. 2242, 2252 (2002) (holding that mentally retarded defendants may not constitutionally be executed).

¹⁸² See Goodpaster, supra note 2, at 321.

¹⁸³ See Norton, supra note 180, at 5; White, supra note 2, at 374-75 (jury will be less likely to empathize with defendant if it does “not perceive a bond between the defendant and his attorney”).

¹⁸⁵ See Bullington v. Missouri, 451 U.S. 430 (1981); see also Sattazahn v. Pennsylvania, 123 S.Ct. 732 (2003).

Counsel in any event should be familiar enough with the client's mental condition to make a reasoned decision – fully documented, for the benefit of actors at later stages of the case – whether to assert the position that the client is not competent to waive further proceedings.¹⁸⁶

The Temporal Scope of Counsel's Duties

The obligations imposed on counsel by this Guideline apply to all stages of the case. Thus, post-conviction counsel, from direct appeal through clemency, must not only consult with the client but also monitor the client's personal condition for potential legal consequences.¹⁸⁷ For example, actions by prison authorities (e.g., solitary confinement, administration of psychotropic medications) may impede the ability to present the client as a witness at a hearing,¹⁸⁸ and changes in the client's mental state (e.g., as a result of the breakup of a close relationship or a worsening physical condition) may bear upon his capacity to assist counsel and, ultimately, to be executed.¹⁸⁹ In any event, as already discussed, maintaining an ongoing relationship with the client minimizes the possibility that he will engage in counter-productive behavior (e.g., attempt to drop appeals, act out before a judge, confess to the media). Thus, the failure to maintain such a relationship is professionally irresponsible.¹⁹⁰

Guideline 10.6 Additional Obligations of Counsel Representing a Foreign National

- A. Counsel at every stage of the case should make appropriate efforts to determine whether any foreign country might consider the client to be one of its nationals.
- B. Unless predecessor counsel has already done so, counsel representing a foreign national should:
 - 1. immediately advise the client of his or her right to communicate with the relevant consular office; and
 - 2. obtain the consent of the client to contact the consular office. After obtaining consent, counsel should immediately contact the client’s consular office and inform it of the client’s detention or arrest.
 - a. Counsel who is unable to obtain consent should exercise his or her best professional judgment under the circumstances.

Commentary

The right to consular assistance is contained in Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, a multilateral treaty ratified unconditionally by the United States in 1969. Under its provisions, an obligation rests on local authorities to promptly inform detained or arrested foreign nationals of their right to communicate with their consulate. At the request of the foreign national, local authorities must contact the consulate and permit consular communication and access.

There is considerable evidence that American local authorities routinely fail to comply with their obligations under the Vienna Convention.¹⁹¹

¹⁹¹ See Breard v. Greene, 523 U.S. 371, 380 (1998) (Breyer, J., dissenting) (finding Paraguayan national's argument for stay of execution not wholly without merit where the United States government had submitted an amicus brief acknowledging that the Vienna Convention had been violated); Sandra Babcock, The Role of International Law in United States Death Penalty Cases, 15 LEIDEN J. INT. L. 367, 368 (2002) (describing violations as “widespread and uncontested”). See also Case Concerning Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mexico v. U.S.A.) (Order on Request for the Indication of Provisional Remedies) (Feb. 5, 2003) (text accessible at http://www.icj-ij.org/icjwww/idocket/imus/imusorder/imus_order_20030205.PDF)

Any such failure is likely to have both practical and legal implications. As a practical matter, consuls are empowered to arrange for their nationals' legal representation and to provide a wide range of other services. These include, to name a few, enlisting the diplomatic assistance of their country to communicate with the State Department and international and domestic tribunals (e.g., through amicus briefs), assisting in investigations abroad, providing culturally appropriate resources to explain the American legal system, arranging for contact with families and other supportive individuals. As a legal matter, a breach of the obligations of the Vienna Convention or a bilateral consular convention may well give rise to a claim on behalf of the client.

Enlisting the consulate's support after obtaining the client's consent to do so should therefore be viewed by counsel as an important element in defending a foreign national at any stage of a death penalty case,¹⁹² and counsel should also give careful consideration to the assertion of any legal rights that the client may have as a result of any failure of the government to meet its treaty obligations.

Subsection B(2)(a) recognizes, however, that cases do vary. A range of considerations may make clients reluctant to have their consular office informed of their detentions. In many circumstances, such as those in which clients simply fear embarrassment if word of their plight reaches home, the attorney should counsel the client to overcome the reluctance. But if the client is a political dissident and the likely effect of informing the consulate would be to cause adverse (ordering United States to take all necessary measures to insure that three Mexican nationals under state death sentences are not executed pending resolution of Mexico's claim "that the United States has systematically violated the rights of Mexico and its nationals under Article 36 of the Vienna Convention").

Furthermore, counsel should be alert to the fact that the United States has bilateral consular treaties with over 50 countries which may impose obligations additional to those under the Vienna Convention, see www.travel.state.gov/notification5.html#provisions (listing treaties). One example is Article 16 of the Consular Convention Between the United States and the United Kingdom, 3 U.S.T. 3426 (1952), which currently covers 32 independent countries around the world that were formerly entities within the British Empire.

¹⁹² See Valdez v. State, 46 P.3d 703, 710 (Okla. Crim. App. 2002) (granting post-conviction relief because it was ineffective assistance for trial counsel not to "inform Petitioner he could have obtained financial, legal and investigative assistance from his consulate"); see also *Breard v. Foreign governments often have formal assistance programs in place for nationals facing the death penalty in the United States. See, e.g., Ana Mendieta, Mexico Will Aid Nationals in US; Fund Will Help 45 Death Row Inmates, CHICAGO SUN-TIMES, Oct. 6, 2000, at 18 (describing creation of legal assistance program to defend the rights of Mexican nationals sentenced to death in the United States and bolster recognition of rights under the Vienna Convention); Court Blocks Execution of Canadian in Texas, WASH. consequences to his relatives without obtaining any assistance with the case, the attorney might reasonably abide by the client's direction to withhold notification. The matter should, however, be kept under continuing review, since conditions may well change over time.

Subsection A is included in the Guideline to emphasize that the determination of nationality may require some effort by counsel. A foreign government might recognize an American citizen as one of its nationals on the basis of an affiliation (e.g. one grandparent of that nationality) that would not be apparent at first glance.

Guideline 10.7 Investigation

- A. Counsel at every stage have an obligation to conduct thorough and independent investigations relating to the issues of both guilt and penalty.
- 1. The investigation regarding guilt should be conducted regardless of any admission or statement by the client concerning the facts of the alleged crime, or overwhelming evidence of guilt, or any statement by the client that evidence bearing upon guilt is not to be collected or presented.
 - 2. The investigation regarding penalty should be conducted regardless of any statement by the client that evidence bearing upon penalty is not to be collected or presented.
- B. 1. Counsel at every stage have an obligation to conduct a full examination of the defense provided to the client at all prior phases of the case. This obligation includes at minimum interviewing prior counsel and members of the defense team and examining the files of prior counsel.
- 2. Counsel at every stage have an obligation to satisfy themselves independently that the official record of the proceedings is complete and to supplement it as appropriate.

History of Guideline

This Guideline is based on portions of Guideline 11.4.1 of the original edition. Changes in this Guideline clarify that counsel should conduct thorough and independent investigations relating to both guilt and penalty issues regardless of overwhelming evidence of guilt, client statements concerning the facts of the alleged crime, or client statements that counsel should refrain from collecting or presenting evidence bearing upon guilt or penalty.

Subsection B (1) is new and describes the obligation of counsel at every stage to examine the defense provided to the client at all prior phases of the case. Subsection B (2) is also new and describes counsel's ongoing obligation to ensure that the official record of proceedings is complete.

Commentary

At every stage of the proceedings, counsel has a duty to investigate the case thoroughly.¹⁹³ This duty is intensified (as are many duties) by the unique nature of the death penalty, has been emphasized by recent statutory changes,¹⁹⁴ and is broadened by the bifurcation of capital trials.¹⁹⁵ This Guideline outlines the scope of the investigation required a capital case, but is not intended to be exhaustive.

Guilt/Innocence

As noted supra in the text accompanying notes 47-49, between 1973 and 2002 some 100 people were freed from death row in the United States on the grounds of innocence.¹⁹⁶ Unfortunately, inadequate investigation by defense attorneys – as well as faulty eyewitness identification, coerced confessions, prosecutorial misconduct, false jailhouse informant testimony,¹⁹⁷ flawed or false forensic evidence,¹⁹⁸ and the special vulnerability of juvenile ¹⁹⁵ See generally Lyon, supra note 2; Vick, supra note 3. Numerous courts have found counsel to be ineffective when they have failed to conduct an adequate investigation for sentencing. See, e.g. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 395-96 (2000) (counsel ineffective for failing to uncover and present evidence of defendant's "nightmarish childhood," borderline mental retardation, and good conduct in prison); *Brownlee v. ¹⁹⁸ Recent years have seen a series of scandals involving the prosecution's use, knowingly or unknowingly, of scientifically unsupportable or simply fabricated forensic evidence by governmental agents. See, e.g., U.S. DEPT. JUSTICE, OFF. INSP. GEN., The FBI Laboratory: An Investigation into Laboratory Practices and Alleged Misconduct in Explosives Related and Other Cases (1997) (Eighteen-months investigation into charges by whistleblower Frederic Whitehurst that FBI Laboratory mishandled "some of the most significant prosecutions in the recent history of

In this regard, the elements of an appropriate investigation include the following:

1. Charging Documents:

Copies of all charging documents in the case should be obtained and examined in the context of the applicable law to identify:

- a. the elements of the charged offense(s), including the element(s) alleged to make the death penalty applicable;
- b. the defenses, ordinary and affirmative, that may be available to the substantive charge and to the applicability of the death penalty;
- c. any issues, constitutional or otherwise, (such as statutes of limitations or double jeopardy) that can be raised to attack the charging documents; and

- d. defense counsel's right to obtain information in the possession of the government, and the applicability and validity of any obligation that might arise to provide reciprocal discovery.

2. Potential Witnesses:

- a. Barring exceptional circumstances, counsel should seek out and interview potential witnesses, including, but not limited to:
 - (1) eyewitnesses or other witnesses having purported knowledge of events surrounding the alleged offense itself;
 - (2) potential alibi witness;
 - (3) witnesses familiar with aspects of the client's life history that might affect the likelihood that the client committed the charged offense(s), the degree of culpability for the offense, including:
 - (a) members of the client's immediate and extended family
 - (b) neighbors, friends and acquaintances who knew the client or his family
 - (c) former teachers, clergy, employers, co-workers, social service providers, and doctors
 - (d) correctional, probation or parole officers;
 - (4) members of the victim's family.
- b. Counsel should conduct interviews of potential witnesses in the presence of a third person so that there is someone to call as a defense witness at trial. Alternatively, counsel should have an investigator or mitigation specialist conduct the interviews. Counsel should investigate all sources of possible impeachment of defense and prosecution witnesses.

3. The Police and Prosecution:

Counsel should make efforts to secure information in the possession of the prosecution or law enforcement authorities, including police reports, autopsy reports, photos, video or audio tape recordings, and crime scene and crime lab reports. Where necessary, counsel should pursue such efforts through formal and informal discovery.

4. Physical Evidence:

Counsel should make a prompt request to the police or investigative agency for any physical evidence or expert reports relevant to the offense or sentencing. With the assistance of appropriate experts, counsel should then aggressively re-examine all of the government's forensic evidence, and conduct appropriate analyses of all other available forensic evidence.

5. The Scene:

Counsel should view the scene of the alleged offense as soon as possible. This should be done under circumstances as similar as possible to those existing at the time of the alleged incident (e.g., weather, time of day, and lighting conditions).

Counsel's duty to investigate and present mitigating evidence is now well established.²⁰³ The duty to investigate exists regardless of the expressed desires of a client.²⁰⁴ Nor may counsel "sit idly by, thinking that investigation would be futile."²⁰⁵ Counsel cannot responsibly advise a client about the merits of different courses of action, the client cannot make informed decisions, and counsel cannot be sure of the client's competency to make such decisions, unless counsel has first conducted a thorough investigation with respect to both phases of the case.²⁰⁶

Because the sentencer in a capital case must consider in mitigation, “anything in the life of the defendant which might militate against the appropriateness of the death penalty for the defendant,”²⁰⁷ “penalty phase preparation requires extensive and generally unparalleled investigation into personal and family history.”²⁰⁸ In the case of the client, this begins with the moment of conception.²⁰⁹ Counsel needs to explore:

- (1) Medical history (including hospitalizations, mental and physical illness or injury, alcohol and drug use, pre-natal and birth trauma, malnutrition, developmental delays, and neurological damage);
- (2) Family and social history (including physical, sexual or emotional abuse; family history of mental illness, cognitive impairments, substance abuse, or domestic violence; poverty, familial instability, neighborhood environment and peer influence); other traumatic events such as exposure to criminal violence, the loss of a loved one or a natural disaster; experiences of racism or other social or ethnic bias; cultural or religious influences; failures of government or social intervention (e.g., failure to intervene or provide

- (5) Employment and training history (including skills and performance, and barriers to employability);
- (6) Prior juvenile and adult correctional experience (including conduct while under supervision, in institutions of education or training, and regarding clinical services);

The mitigation investigation should begin as quickly as possible, because it may affect the investigation of first phase defenses (e.g., by suggesting additional areas for questioning police officers or other witnesses), decisions about the need for expert evaluations (including competency, mental retardation, or insanity), motion practice, and plea negotiations.²¹⁰

Accordingly, immediately upon counsel's entry into the case appropriate member(s) of the defense team should meet with the client to:

1. discuss the alleged offense or events giving rise to the charge(s), and any improper police investigative practice or prosecutorial conduct which affects the client's rights;
2. explore the existence of other potential sources of information relating to the offense, the client's mental state, and the presence or absence of any aggravating factors under the applicable death penalty statute and any mitigating factors; and
3. obtain necessary releases for securing confidential records relating to any of the relevant histories.

Counsel should bear in mind that much of the information that must be elicited for the sentencing phase investigation is very personal and may be extremely difficult for the client to discuss. Topics like childhood sexual abuse should therefore not be broached in an initial interview. Obtaining such information typically requires overcoming considerable barriers, such as shame, denial and repression, as well as other mental or emotional impairments from which the client may suffer. As noted supra in the text accompanying note 101, a mitigation specialist who is trained to recognize and overcome these barriers, and who has the skills to help the client cope with the emotional impact of such painful disclosures, is invaluable in conducting this aspect of the investigation.

It is necessary to locate and interview the client's family members (who may suffer from some of the same impairments as the client), and virtually everyone else who knew the client and his family, including neighbors, teachers, clergy, case workers, doctors, correctional, probation or parole officers, and others.²¹¹ Records – from courts, government agencies, the military, employers, etc. – can contain a wealth of mitigating evidence, documenting or providing clues to childhood abuse, retardation, brain damage, and/or mental illness,²¹² and corroborating witnesses' recollections. Records should be requested concerning not only the client, but also his parents, grandparents, siblings, and children.²¹³ A multi-generational investigation frequently discloses significant patterns of family dysfunction and may help establish or strengthen a diagnosis or underscore the hereditary nature of a particular impairment.²¹⁴ The collection of corroborating information from multiple sources – a time-consuming task – is important wherever possible to ensure the reliability and thus the persuasiveness of the evidence.²¹⁵

Had they done so, the jury would have learned that Williams’ parents had been imprisoned for the criminal neglect of Williams and his siblings, that Williams had been severely and repeatedly beaten by his father, that he had been committed to the custody of the social services bureau for two years during his parents’ incarceration (including one stint in an abusive foster home), and then, after his parents were released from prison, had been returned to his parents’ custody.”) (footnote omitted); *Jermyn v. Counsel should use all appropriate avenues including signed releases, subpoenas, court orders, and requests or litigation pursuant to applicable open records statutes, to obtain all potentially relevant information pertaining to the client, his or her siblings and parents, and other family members, including but not limited to:

- a. school records
- b. social service and welfare records
- c. juvenile dependency or family court records
- d. medical records
- e. military records
- f. employment records
- g. criminal and correctional records
- h. family birth, marriage, and death records
- i. alcohol and drug abuse assessment or treatment records
- j. INS records

If the client was incarcerated, institutionalized or placed outside of the home, as either a juvenile or an adult, the defense team should investigate the possible effect of the facility's conditions on the client's contemporaneous and later conduct.²¹⁶ The investigation should also explore the adequacy of institutional responses to childhood trauma, mental illness or disability to determine whether the client's problems were ever accurately identified or properly addressed.²¹⁷

The circumstances of a particular case will often require specialized research and expert consultation. For example, if a client grew up in a migrant farm worker community, counsel should investigate what pesticides the client may have been exposed to and their possible effect on a child's developing brain.²¹⁸ If a client is a relatively recent immigrant, counsel must learn about the client's culture, about the circumstances of his upbringing in his country of origin, and about the difficulties the client's immigrant community faces in this country.²¹⁹

Miscellaneous Concerns

Counsel should maintain copies of media reports about the case for various purposes, including to support a motion for change of venue, if appropriate, to assist in voir dire of the jury regarding the effects of pretrial publicity, to monitor the public statements of potential witnesses, and to facilitate the work of counsel who might be involved in later stages of the case.

Counsel must also investigate prior convictions, adjudications, or unadjudicated offenses that could be used as aggravating circumstances or otherwise come into evidence. If a prior conviction is legally flawed, counsel should seek to have it set aside.²²⁰ Counsel may also find extenuating circumstances that can be offered to lessen the weight of a conviction, adjudication, or unadjudicated offense.²²¹

Additional investigation may be required to provide evidentiary support for other legal issues in the case, such as challenging racial discrimination in the imposition of the death penalty or in the composition of juries.²²² Whether within the criminal case or outside it, counsel has a duty to pursue appropriate remedies if the investigation reveals that such conditions exist.²²³

As discussed infra in the text accompanying notes 247-59, counsel should consider making overtures to members of the victim's family – possibly through an intermediary, such as a clergy person, defense-victim liaison, or representative of an organization such as Murder Victim's Families for Reconciliation – to ascertain their feelings about the death penalty and/or the possibility of a plea.²²⁴

Guideline 10.8 The Duty to Assert Legal Claims

- A. Counsel at every stage of the case, exercising professional judgment in accordance with these Guidelines, should:
- 1. consider all legal claims potentially available; and
 - 2. thoroughly investigate the basis for each potential claim before reaching a conclusion as to whether it should be asserted; and
 - 3. evaluate each potential claim in light of:
 - a. the unique characteristics of death penalty law and practice; and
 - b. the near certainty that all available avenues of post-conviction relief will be pursued in the event of conviction and imposition of a death sentence; and
 - c. the importance of protecting the client’s rights against later contentions by the government that the claim has been waived, defaulted, not exhausted, or otherwise forfeited; and
 - d. any other professionally appropriate costs and benefits to the assertion of the claim.
- B. Counsel who decide to assert a particular legal claim should:
- 1. present the claim as forcefully as possible, tailoring the presentation to the particular facts and circumstances in the client’s case and the applicable law in the particular jurisdiction; and
 - 2. ensure that a full record is made of all legal proceedings in connection with the claim.
- C. Counsel at all stages of the case should keep under consideration the possible advantages to the client of:
- 1. asserting legal claims whose basis has only recently become known or available to counsel; and
 - 2. supplementing claims previously made with additional factual or legal information.

History of Guideline

This Guideline is based on Guideline 11.5.1 (The Decision to File Pretrial Motions) and Guideline 11.7.3 (Objection to Error and Preservation of Issues for Post Judgment Review) of the original edition. New language makes clear that the obligations imposed by this Guideline exist at every stage of the proceeding and extend to procedural vehicles other than the submission of motions to the trial court.

In Subsection A (3)(b), the phrase “near certainty” is new and replaces the word “likelihood” from the original edition. The change reflects recent scholarship indicating that appellate and post-conviction remedies are pursued by almost 100% of capital defendants who are convicted and sentenced to death.

Subsections B and C are new to this edition.

Commentary

“One of the most fundamental duties of an attorney defending a capital case at trial is the preservation of any and all conceivable errors for each stage of appellate and post-conviction review. Failure to preserve an issue may result in the client being executed even though reversible error occurred at trial.”²²⁵ For this reason, trial counsel in a death penalty case must be especially aware not only of strategies for winning at trial,²²⁶ but also of the heightened need to fully preserve all potential issues for later review.

As the text of the first sentence of Subsection A makes clear, this obligation is not limited to trial counsel or to motions made to the trial court. For example, if a state post-conviction court rules on the merits of a claim for relief, the claim will be available for federal review even if the ²²⁵ Stephen B. Bright, Preserving Error at Capital Trials, THE CHAMPION, Apr. 1997, at 42-43. For example, John Eldon Smith was executed by the State of Georgia even though he was sentenced to death by a jury selected from a jury pool from which women were unconstitutionally excluded. The federal courts refused to consider the issue because Mr. Smith’s lawyers failed to preserve it. Mr. Smith’s co-defendant was also sentenced to death from a jury selected from the same pool. The issue was preserved in the co-defendant’s case, and the co-defendant’s conviction and death sentence were vacated. At retrial, the co-defendant was sentenced to life imprisonment. Smith v. Kemp, 715 F.2d 1459, 1476 (11th Cir. 1983) (Hatchett, J., dissenting in part), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1003 (1983).

state's rules required the issue to be raised at trial.²²⁷ So, too, it may be appropriate for counsel to proceed on some claims (e.g., double jeopardy) by seeking an interlocutory supervisory writ from an appellate court²²⁸ or by otherwise seeking relief outside the confines of the capital litigation itself.²²⁹

As discussed in the text accompanying note 27 supra, most jurisdictions have strict waiver rules that will forestall post-judgment relief if an issue was not litigated at the first opportunity. An issue may be waived not only by the failure to timely file a pretrial motion, but also because of the lack of a contemporaneous objection at trial, or the failure to request a jury instruction, or counsel's failure to comply with some other procedural requirement established by statute, court rule or caselaw. Counsel must therefore know and follow the procedural requirements for issue preservation and act with the understanding that the failure to raise an issue by motion, objection or other appropriate procedure may well forfeit the ability of the client to obtain relief on that issue in subsequent proceedings.

Whether raising an issue specific to a capital case (such as requesting individual, sequestered voir dire on death-qualification of the jury) or a more common motion shaped by the capital aspect of the case (such as requesting a change of venue because of publicity), counsel should be sure to litigate all of the possible legal²³⁰ and factual²³¹ bases for the request. This will ²²⁷ See Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68, 75 (1985); see also Stewart v. Smith, 122 S. Ct. 2578 (2002) (per curiam).

²²⁹ See supra text accompanying notes 4-8.

²³⁰ Counsel should always cite to any arguably applicable provision of the United States Constitution, the state constitution, and state law as bases for granting a claim. A reviewing court may refuse to consider a legal theory different from that put forward originally. See Anderson v. Harless, 459 U.S. 4 (1982) (refusing to consider violation of Due Process Clause of federal constitution because defense counsel in state courts relied solely upon due process clause of state constitution). For example, courts have refused to consider an assertion that a statement was taken in violation of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel because it was argued in earlier proceedings only that the statement was obtained in violation of the Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination. See McCleskey v. Zant, 499 U.S. 467 (1991). Counsel should also present all of the relevant facts at as early as feasible. See generally Bright, supra note 225, at 43, 44.

²³¹ In this regard, as Subsection C indicates, counsel should bear in mind that in capital litigation the courts tend to be much more responsive to supplemental presentations than they might be in other contexts. See, e.g., Brooks v. Estelle, 697 F.2d 586 (5th Cir. 1982); Spaziano v. State, 660 So.2d 1363 (Fla. 1995) (granting motions filed by defendant facing fifth death warrant that “seek to open by rehearing an appeal that was finalized more than thirteen years ago and a postconviction proceeding that was terminated with a denial of rehearing more than nine years ago,” and ordering a remand that eventually resulted in an in-court recantation by a key witness increase the likelihood that the request will be granted and will also fully preserve the issue for post-conviction review in the event the claim is denied.

Because of the possibility that the client will be sentenced to death, counsel must be significantly more vigilant about litigating all potential issues at all levels in a capital case than in any other case.²³² As described in the Commentary to Guideline 1.1, counsel also has a duty to preserve issues calling for a change in existing precedent; the client's life may well depend on how zealously counsel discharges this duty.²³³ Counsel should object to anything that appears unfair or unjust even if it involves challenging well-accepted practices.²³⁴

Because “[p]reserving all possible grounds can be very difficult in the heat of battle during trial,”²³⁵ counsel should file written motions in limine prior to trial raising any issues that counsel anticipate will arise at trial. All of the grounds should be set out in the motion.²³⁶ Similarly, requests for rulings during the course of post-conviction proceedings (e.g., for investigative resources) should be made fully and formally.

and a life sentence, see DNA Tests to be Done in '74 Case, ORLANDO SENTINEL, Dec. 13, 2002 at B3).

²³² See Bright, supra note 225, at 43 (“Failure to make an objection for fear of alienating the judge or jury may be a valid consideration in a case in which there is a good chance of acquittal or the length of sentence will be so short that appellate review will be irrelevant to the client. But in a capital case, it may deprive the client of a life-saving reversal on direct appeal or in habeas corpus proceedings.”).

²³⁶ See ALABAMA CAPITAL DEFENSE TRIAL MANUAL, supra note 209, at 53.

In accordance with Subsection B (2), counsel should ensure that there is a complete record respecting all claims that are made, including objections, motions, statements of grounds, questioning of witnesses or venire members, oral and written arguments of both sides, discussions among counsel and the court, evidence proffered and received, rulings of the court, reasons given by the court for its rulings, and any agreements reached between the parties. If a court refuses to allow a proceeding to be recorded, counsel should state the objection to the court's refusal, to the substance of the court's ruling, and then at the first available opportunity make a record of what transpired in the unrecorded proceeding.²³⁷ Counsel should also ensure that the record is clear with regard to the critical facts to support the claim. For example, if counsel objects to the peremptory strike of a juror as race-based, counsel should ensure that it is clear from the record not only that the prosecutor struck a particular juror, but the race of the juror, of every other member of the venire, and the extent to which the unchallenged venire members shared the characteristics claimed to be justifying the challenge.²³⁸

Further, as reflected in Guideline 10.7(B)(2), counsel at all stages of the case must determine independently whether the existing official record may incompletely reflect the proceedings, e.g., because the court reporter took notes but did not transcribe them or because the court clerk does not include legal memoranda in the record transmitted to subsequent courts, or because of official negligence or misconduct.

As the nonexclusive list of considerations in Subsection A (3) suggests, there are many instances in which counsel should assert legal claims even though their prospects of immediate success on the merits is at best modest. Examples of such circumstances (in addition to those in which counsel needs to forestall later procedural defenses (Subsection A (3)(c)), include instances where:

the claim should be preserved in light of foreseeable future events (e.g., the completion of an investigation, a ruling in a relevant case); or asserting the claim may increase the government's incentive to reach an agreed-upon disposition;²³⁹ or the presentation made in support of the claim may favorably influence other relevant actors (e.g., the Governor).

Guideline 10.9.1 The Duty to Seek an Agreed-Upon Disposition

- A. Counsel at every stage of the case have an obligation to take all steps that may be appropriate in the exercise of professional judgment in accordance with these Guidelines to achieve an agreed-upon disposition.
- B. Counsel at every stage of the case should explore with the client the possibility and desirability of reaching an agreed-upon disposition. In so doing, counsel should fully explain the rights that would be waived, the possible collateral consequences, and the legal, factual, and contextual considerations that bear upon the decision. Specifically, counsel should know and fully explain to the client:
- 1. the maximum penalty that may be imposed for the charged offense(s) and any possible lesser included or alternative offenses;
 - 2. any collateral consequences of potential penalties less than death, such as forfeiture of assets, deportation, civil liabilities, and the use of the disposition adversely to the client in penalty phase proceedings of other prosecutions of him as well as any direct consequences of potential penalties less than death, such as the possibility and likelihood of parole, place of confinement and good-time credits;
 - 3. the general range of sentences for similar offenses committed by defendants with similar backgrounds, and the impact of any applicable sentencing guidelines or mandatory sentencing requirements;
 - 4. the governing legal regime, including but not limited to whatever choices the client may have as to the fact finder and/or sentencer;
 - 5. the types of pleas that may be agreed to, such as a plea of guilty, a conditional plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere or other plea which does not require the client to personally acknowledge guilt, along with the advantages and disadvantages of each;
 - 6. whether any agreement negotiated can be made binding on the court, on penal/parole authorities, and any others who may be involved;
 - 7. the practices, policies and concerns of the particular jurisdiction, the judge and prosecuting authority, the family of the victim and any other persons or entities which may affect the content and likely results of plea negotiations;
 - 8. concessions that the client might offer, such as:
 - a. an agreement to proceed waive trial and to plead guilty to particular charges;
 - b. an agreement to permit a judge to perform functions relative to guilt or sentence that would otherwise be performed by a jury or vice versa;

- C. Counsel should keep the client fully informed of any negotiations for a disposition, convey to the client any offers made by the prosecution, and discuss with the client possible negotiation strategies.
- D. Counsel should inform the client of any tentative negotiated agreement reached with the prosecution, and explain to the client the full content of the agreement along with the advantages, disadvantages and potential consequences of the agreement.
- E. If a negotiated disposition would be in the best interest of the client, initial refusals by the prosecutor to negotiate should not prevent counsel from making further efforts to negotiate. Similarly, a client's initial opposition should not prevent counsel from engaging in an ongoing effort to persuade the client to accept an offer of resolution that is in the client's best interest.
- F. Counsel should not accept any agreed-upon disposition without the client's express authorization.
- G. The existence of ongoing negotiations with the prosecution does not in any way diminish the obligations of defense counsel respecting litigation.

History of Guideline

Guideline 10.9.1 is based on aspects of Guidelines 11.6.1, 11.6.2, and 11.6.3 of the original edition. New language has been added to clarify the importance of pursuing an agreed-upon disposition at every phase of the case, not just as a substitute for proceeding to trial initially.

This Guideline omits the requirement, which appeared in Guideline 11.6.1 of the original edition, of client consent to initiate plea discussions, in recognition of the possible unintended consequence of premature rejection of plea options by a suicidal or depressed client. However, the Guideline does require counsel to obtain the client's consent before accepting any agreed-upon disposition. Moreover, the Guideline requires that counsel enter into a continuing dialogue with the client about the content of any such agreement, including advantages, disadvantages, and potential consequences.

Commentary

Guidelines 10.9.1–2 both deal with the subject of agreed-upon dispositions. They and their associated commentaries should be read together.

“Death is different because avoiding execution is, in many capital cases, the best and only realistic result possible”; as a result, plea bargains in capital cases are not usually “offered” but instead must be “pursued and won.”²⁴⁰ Agreements are often only possible after many years of effort. Accordingly, this Guideline emphasizes that the obligation of counsel to seek an agreed-upon disposition continues throughout all phases of the case. As in other sorts of protracted litigation, circumstances change over time and as they do (e.g., through replacement of a prosecutor, death of a prosecution witness, alteration in viewpoint of a key family member of the client or the victim, favorable developments in the law or the litigation, reconsideration by the client) new possibilities arise.²⁴¹ Whenever they do, counsel must pursue them.

In many jurisdictions, the prosecution will consider waiving the death penalty after the defense makes a proffer of the mitigating evidence that would be presented at the penalty phase and explains why death would be legally and/or factually inappropriate. In some states and the federal government, this process is formalized and occurs before a decision is made whether to seek the death penalty.²⁴² In other jurisdictions, the process is not formalized and may occur after the prosecution has announced its intention to seek the death penalty. In either event, the mitigation investigation is crucial to persuading the prosecution not to seek death.²⁴³

Stewart*, 132 F.3d (9th Cir. 1997) (en banc), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1133 (1998), client pleaded guilty to lesser offense and was released). Numerous other instances are reported in LIEBMAN ET AL., supra note 27, Apps. C, D.

²⁴² See UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS’ MANUAL, supra note 160, § 9-10.030. New York law gives the District Attorney a 120-day “deliberative period” to decide whether to file a notice of intent to seek the death penalty. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 250.40(2) (McKinney 2002); Francois v. Dolan, 95 N.Y.2d 33, 37, 731 N.E.2d 614, 616, 709 N.Y.S.2d 898, 900 (2000). During that time, with the assistance of the Capital Defender’s Office, counsel is appointed and may attempt to persuade the prosecutor not to file a notice. See N.Y. JUD. LAW § 35-b (McKinney 2001). The notice may also be withdrawn at any time. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 250.40(4) (McKinney 2002). Between 1995 and mid-2002, District Attorneys in New York formally investigated seeking the death penalty against 701 defendants, but only filed notice that they were seeking the death penalty against 43 of these. See New York Capital Defender Office home page, available at <<http://www.nycdo.org>>.

²⁴³ See Doyle, supra note 178; White, supra note 2, at 328-29.

Before entering into plea discussions, counsel should have thoroughly examined the quality of the prosecution's case and investigated possible first-phase defenses and mitigation, as discussed in the Commentary to Guideline 10.7. Counsel must also consider the collateral consequences of entering a plea. For example, when the resulting adjudication of guilt could be used as an aggravating circumstance in another pending case, counsel should endeavor to structure an agreement that would resolve both cases without imposition of the death penalty.

In some cases, where there is a viable first-phase defense, it may be possible to negotiate a plea to a lesser charge. And if it is trial counsel's perception that the death penalty is being sought primarily to allow selection of a death-qualified (and therefore conviction-prone) jury, counsel should seek to remedy the situation through litigation in accordance with Guideline 10.8 as well as through negotiation. In many capital cases, however, the prosecution's evidence of guilt is strong, and there is little or no chance of charge bargaining. In these cases, a guilty plea in exchange for life imprisonment is the best available outcome.

These considerations mean that in the area of plea negotiations, as in so many others, death penalty cases are sui generis. Many bases for bargaining in non-capital cases are irrelevant or have little practical significance in a capital case,²⁴⁴ and some uniquely restrictive legal principles apply.²⁴⁵ Emotional and political pressures, including ones from the victim's family or the media, are especially likely to limit the government's willingness to bargain. On the other hand, the complexity, expense, legal risks, and length of the capital trial and appellate process may make an agreement particularly desirable for the prosecution.²⁴⁶

A very difficult but important part of capital plea negotiation is often contact with the family of the victim.²⁴⁷ In some states, the prosecution is required to notify and confer with the victim's family prior to entering a plea agreement.²⁴⁸ Any approaches to the victim's family should be undertaken carefully and with sensitivity. Counsel should be creative in proposing resolutions that may satisfy the needs of the victim's family, including providing more immediate closure by expressly foregoing appeals or arranging an apology or meeting between the victim's family and the client if the client is willing and able to do so. The defense team may consider seeking the assistance of clergy, a defense-victim liaison, or an organization of murder victims' families in the outreach effort and in crafting possible resolutions.²⁴⁹ The victim's family can be critical to achieving a settlement.²⁵⁰

Except in unusual circumstances, all agreements that are made should be formally documented between the parties concerned (e.g., in a writing between the client and representatives of the victim). In any event, counsel has an obligation under Guideline 10.13 to maintain in his or her own files a complete written description of any agreement.

Agreements for action or nonaction by government actors in exchange for a plea of guilty are governed by Guideline 10.9.2(B)(2) and, for the client's future benefit, should be set forth as clearly as possible on the record.²⁵¹

In addition to persuading the prosecution to negotiate a resolution to the case, counsel must often persuade the client as well. As discussed in the Commentary to Guidelines 10.5 and 10.9.2, a relationship of trust with the client is essential to accomplishing this. The entire defense team must work from the outset of the case with the client and others close to him to lay the groundwork for acceptance of a reasonable resolution.

If the possibility of a negotiated disposition is rejected by either the prosecution or the client when a settlement appears to counsel to be in the client's best interest, counsel should continue efforts at persuasion while also continuing to litigate the case vigorously (Subsection G).

Guideline 10.9.2 Entry of a Plea of Guilty

- A. The informed decision whether to enter a plea of guilty lies with the client.
- B. In the event the client determines to enter a plea of guilty:
 - 1. Prior to the entry of the plea, counsel should:
 - a. make certain that the client understands the rights to be waived by entering the plea and that the client’s decision to waive those rights is knowing, voluntary and intelligent;
 - b. ensure that the client understands the conditions and limits of the plea agreement and the maximum punishment, sanctions, and other consequences to which he or she will be exposed by entering the plea;
 - c. explain to the client the nature of the plea hearing and prepare the client for the role he or she will play in the hearing, including answering questions in court and providing a statement concerning the offense.
 - 2. During entry of the plea, counsel should make sure that the full content and conditions of any agreements with the government are placed on the record.

History of Guideline

This Guideline amends Guideline 11.6.4 of the original edition to clarify that the decision regarding whether to enter a plea of guilty must be informed and counseled, yet ultimately lies with the client.

Commentary

If no written guarantee can be obtained that death will not be imposed following a plea of guilty, counsel should be extremely reluctant to participate in a waiver of the client's trial rights.

The relationship that the defense team has established with the client and his or her family will often determine whether the client will accept counsel's advice regarding the advisability of a plea. The case must therefore be diligently investigated so that the client will have as realistic a view of the situation as possible. As the Commentary to Guideline 10.5 describes, a client will, quite reasonably, not accept counsel's advice about the case if the attorney has failed to conduct a meaningful investigation.²⁵²

A competent client is ultimately entitled to make his own choice. Counsel's role is to ensure that the choice is as well considered as possible. This may require counsel to work diligently over time to overcome the client's natural resistance to the idea of standing in open court, admitting to guilt, and perhaps agreeing to permanent imprisonment. Or it may require counsel to do everything possible to prevent a depressed or suicidal client from pleading guilty where such a plea could result in an avoidable death sentence.²⁵³

Because of the factors described in the text accompanying notes 178-90 supra, it will often require the combined and sustained efforts of the entire defense team to dissuade the client from making a self-destructive decision. As noted there, the defense team may also need to call on family, friends, clergy, and others to provide information that assists the client in reaching an appropriate conclusion.

Guideline 10.10.1 Trial Preparation Overall

- A. As the investigations mandated by Guideline 10.7 produce information, trial counsel should formulate a defense theory. Counsel should seek a theory that will be effective in connection with both guilt and penalty, and should seek to minimize any inconsistencies.

History of Guideline

The revisions to this Guideline, which was formerly Guideline 11.7.1, are stylistic.

Commentary

Formulation of and adherence to a persuasive and understandable defense theory are vital in any criminal case. In a capital trial, the task of constructing a viable strategy is complicated by the fact that the proceedings are bifurcated. The client is entitled to have counsel insist that the state prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.²⁵⁴ At the same time, if counsel takes contradictory positions at guilt/innocence and sentencing, credibility with the sentencer is lost and the defendant's chances for a life verdict reduced. Accordingly, it is critical that, well before trial, counsel formulate an integrated defense theory²⁵⁵ that will be reinforced by its presentation at both the guilt and mitigation stages.²⁵⁶ Counsel should then advance that theory during all phases of the trial, including jury selection, witness preparation, pretrial motions, opening statement, presentation of evidence, and closing argument.²⁵⁷

²⁵⁵ See infra text accompanying notes 271-74; McNally, supra note 240, at 8-11; White, supra note 2, at 356-58.

²⁵⁶ As the text accompanying notes 102-03 supra suggests, for counsel to gamble that there never will be a mitigation phase because the client will not be convicted of the capital charge is to render ineffective assistance.

²⁵⁷ See Bright, supra note 225, at 40.

Guideline 10.10.2 Voir Dire and Jury Selection

- A. Counsel should consider, along with potential legal challenges to the procedures for selecting the jury that would be available in any criminal case (particularly those relating to bias on the basis of race or gender), whether any procedures have been instituted for selection of juries in capital cases that present particular legal bases for challenge. Such challenges may include challenges to the selection of the grand jury and grand jury forepersons as well as to the selection of the petit jury venire.
- B. Counsel should be familiar with the precedents relating to questioning and challenging of potential jurors, including the procedures surrounding “death qualification” concerning any potential juror’s beliefs about the death penalty. Counsel should be familiar with techniques: (1) for exposing those prospective jurors who would automatically impose the death penalty following a murder conviction or finding that the defendant is death-eligible, regardless of the individual circumstances of the case; (2) for uncovering those prospective jurors who are unable to give meaningful consideration to mitigating evidence; and (3) for rehabilitating potential jurors whose initial indications of opposition to the death penalty make them possibly excludable.
- C. Counsel should consider seeking expert assistance in the jury selection process.

History of Guideline

This Guideline is based on Guideline 11.7.2 of the original edition. Subsection A of the Guideline has been amended to make clear that potential jury composition challenges should not be limited to the petit jury, but should also include the selection of the grand jury and grand jury forepersons. Subsection B has been amended to reflect recent scholarship demonstrating that the starkest failures of capital voir dire are the failure to uncover jurors who will automatically impose the death penalty following a conviction or finding of the circumstances which make the defendant eligible for the death penalty, and the failure to uncover jurors who are unable to consider particular mitigating circumstances. Subsection C is new. Its language is derived from NAT’L LEGAL AID & DEFENDER ASS’N, PERFORMANCE GUIDELINES FOR CRIMINAL DEFENSE REPRESENTATION Guideline 7.2(a)(7) (1995) (“Voir Dire and Jury Selection”), and the accompanying Commentary.

Commentary

Jury selection is important and complex in any criminal case.²⁵⁸ In capital cases, it is all the more critical. Counsel should devote substantial time to determining the makeup of the venire, preparing a case-specific set of voir dire questions, planning a strategy for voir dire, and choosing a jury most favorable to the theories of mitigation that will be presented. Given the intricacy of the process, counsel should consider obtaining the assistance of an expert jury consultant.²⁵⁹

²⁵⁸ See John H. Blume, et al., Probing “Life Qualification” Through Expanded Voir Dire, 29 HOFSTRA L. REV. 1209, 1209 & n.1 (2001) (“The conventional wisdom is that most trials are won or lost in jury selection.”); NAT’L LEGAL AID & DEFENDER ASS’N, PERFORMANCE GUIDELINES FOR CRIMINAL DEFENSE REPRESENTATION, Guideline 7.2 cmt. ²⁵⁹ See NAT’L LEGAL AID & DEFENDER ASS’N, PERFORMANCE GUIDELINES FOR CRIMINAL DEFENSE REPRESENTATION, Guideline 7.2 cmt. (1995) (“Voir Dire and Jury Selection”) (noting that the need for jury selection experts is “most obvious in extraordinary cases such as death Counsel's jury selection strategy should minimize the problem of "death qualified" juries that result from exclusion of potential jurors whose opposition to capital punishment effectively skews the jury pool not only as to imposition of the death penalty but as to conviction.²⁶⁰ Caselaw stemming from Supreme Court decisions that address capital jury selection procedures²⁶¹ has resulted in a highly specialized and technical procedure. As a practical matter, the burden rests with defense counsel to "life qualify" a jury. Counsel should conduct a voir dire that is broad enough to expose those prospective jurors who are unable or unwilling to follow the applicable sentencing law because they will either automatically vote for death in certain circumstances, or are unwilling to consider mitigating evidence.²⁶² Counsel should also develop a strategy for rehabilitating those prospective jurors who have indicated opposition to the death penalty. Bearing in mind that the history of capital punishment in this country is intimately bound up with its history of race relations,²⁶³ counsel should determine whether discrimination is involved in the penalty cases").

²⁶⁰ See Blume et al., supra note 258, at 1232 ("[E]xposure to the death qualification process makes a juror more likely to assume the defendant will be convicted and sentenced to death; more likely to assume that the law disapproves of persons who oppose the death penalty; more likely to assume that the judge, prosecutor, and defense attorney all believe the defendant is guilty and will be sentenced to die; and more likely to believe that the defendant deserves the death penalty."). See also Liebman, supra note 28, at 2097 & n.164 (discussing studies demonstrating that death qualification process produces juries more likely to convict than non-death-qualified juries, and that repeated discussion of death penalty during voir dire in capital cases makes jurors substantially more likely to vote for death).

Nonetheless, the current state of Supreme Court caselaw is that a jurisdiction does not violate the federal Constitution by using the death qualification process. See Lockhart v. McCree, 476 U.S. 162, 170 (1986).

Illinois*, 504 U.S. 719, 729 (1992) (holding "juror[s] who will automatically vote for the death penalty in every case" or are unwilling or unable to give meaningful consideration to mitigating evidence must be disqualified from service); Wainwright v. Witt, 469 U.S. 412, 415-16 (1985) (holding that trial judges may exclude from a capital jury persons with absolutist views on the death penalty, such that they are either in favor of, or opposed to it in every case); Adams v. Texas, 448 U.S. 38 (1980) (invalidating statute disqualifying any juror who would not swear "that the mandatory penalty of death or imprisonment for life will not affect his deliberations on any issue of fact"); Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 513 (1968) (holding that persons who have qualms about the death penalty in general, and who might be inclined to oppose it as a matter of public policy, but who can put aside those reservations in a particular case, and in compliance with their oaths as jurors consider imposing the death penalty according to the relevant state law, may not be precluded from serving as jurors in a death penalty case).

jury selection process. Counsel should investigate whether minorities or women are underrepresented on the jury lists from which grand and petit juries are drawn, or if race or gender played a role in the selection of grand jury forepersons.²⁶⁴ The defense in a capital case is entitled to voir dire to discover those potential jurors poisoned by racial bias,²⁶⁵ and should do so when appropriate. Death qualification often results in the removal of more prospective jurors who are members of minority groups than those who are white, because minority jurors are more likely to express reservations about the death penalty.²⁶⁶ Neither race nor gender may form a basis for peremptory challenges,²⁶⁷ but a recent empirical analysis of capital murder cases supports the conclusion that “discrimination in the use of peremptory challenges on the basis of race and gender . . . is widespread.”²⁶⁸ Counsel should listen closely to the prosecutor’s voir dire, challenges for cause and reasons for exercising peremptory challenges, make appropriate objections, and ensure that all information critical to a discrimination claim is preserved on the record.²⁶⁹

Guideline 10.11 The Defense Case Concerning Penalty

- A. As set out in Guideline 10.7(A), counsel at every stage of the case have a continuing duty to investigate issues bearing upon penalty and to seek information that supports mitigation or rebuts the prosecution’s case in aggravation.
- B. Trial counsel should discuss with the client early in the case the sentencing alternatives available, and the relationship between the strategy for the sentencing phase and for the guilt/innocence phase.
- C. Prior to the sentencing phase, trial counsel should discuss with the client the specific sentencing phase procedures of the jurisdiction and advise the client of steps being taken in preparation for sentencing.
- D. Counsel at every stage of the case should discuss with the client the content and purpose of the information concerning penalty that they intend to present to the sentencing or reviewing body or individual, means by which the mitigation presentation might be strengthened, and the strategy for meeting the prosecution’s case in aggravation.
- E. Counsel should consider, and discuss with the client, the possible consequences of having the client testify or make a statement to the sentencing or reviewing body or individual.
- F. In deciding which witnesses and evidence to prepare concerning penalty, the areas counsel should consider include the following:
 - 1. Witnesses familiar with and evidence relating to the client’s life and development, from conception to the time of sentencing, that would be explanatory of the offense(s) for which the client is being sentenced, would rebut or explain evidence presented by the prosecutor, would present positive aspects of the client’s life, or would otherwise support a sentence less than death;
 - 2. Expert and lay witnesses along with supporting documentation (e.g. school records, military records) to provide medical, psychological, sociological, cultural or other insights into the client’s mental and/or emotional state and life history that may explain or lessen the client’s culpability for the underlying offense(s); to give a favorable opinion as to the client’s capacity for rehabilitation, or adaptation to prison; to explain possible treatment programs; or otherwise support a sentence less than death; and/or to rebut or explain evidence presented by the prosecutor;
 - 3. Witnesses who can testify about the applicable alternative to a death sentence and/or the conditions under which the alternative sentence would be served;
 - 4. Witnesses who can testify about the adverse impact of the client’s execution on the client’s family and loved ones;

5. Demonstrative evidence, such as photos, videos, and physical objects (e.g., trophies, artwork, military medals), and documents that humanize the client or portray him positively, such as certificates of earned awards, favorable press accounts, and letters of praise or reference.
- G. In determining what presentation to make concerning penalty, counsel should consider whether any portion of the defense case will open the door to the prosecution's presentation of otherwise inadmissible aggravating evidence. Counsel should pursue all appropriate means (e.g., motions in limine) to ensure that the defense case concerning penalty is constricted as little as possible by this consideration, and should make a full record in order to support any subsequent challenges.
- H. Trial counsel should determine at the earliest possible time what aggravating factors the prosecution will rely upon in seeking the death penalty and what evidence will be offered in support thereof. If the jurisdiction has rules regarding notification of these factors, counsel at all stages of the case should object to any non-compliance, and if such rules are inadequate, counsel at all stages of the case should challenge the adequacy of the rules.
- I. Counsel at all stages of the case should carefully consider whether all or part of the aggravating evidence may appropriately be challenged as improper, inaccurate, misleading or not legally admissible.
- J. If the prosecution is granted leave at any stage of the case to have the client interviewed by witnesses associated with the government, defense counsel should:
 1. carefully consider
 - a. what legal challenges may appropriately be made to the interview or the conditions surrounding it, and
 - b. the legal and strategic issues implicated by the client's co-operation or non-cooperation;
 2. insure that the client understands the significance of any statements made during such an interview ; and
 3. attend the interview.
- K. Trial counsel should request jury instructions and verdict forms that ensure that jurors will be able to consider and give effect to all relevant mitigating evidence. Trial counsel should object to instructions or verdict forms that are constitutionally flawed, or are inaccurate, or confusing and should offer alternative instructions. Post-conviction counsel should pursue these issues through factual investigation and legal argument.

- L. Counsel at every stage of the case should take advantage of all appropriate opportunities to argue why death is not suitable punishment for their particular client.

History of Guideline

The substance of this Guideline is drawn from Guideline 11.8.3 of the original edition. The principal changes are the expansion of coverage to counsel at all stages of the proceedings, and language changes to underscore the range and importance of expert testimony in capital cases, the breadth of mitigating evidence, and counsel's duty to present arguments in mitigation.

Commentary

Capital sentencing is unique in a variety of ways, but only one ultimately matters: the stakes are life and death.

This Commentary is written primarily from the perspective of trial counsel. But corresponding obligations rest on successor counsel. This Guideline has been broadened to include them because of the realities that in capital cases (a) more evidence tends to become available to the defense as time passes,²⁷⁰ and (b) updated presentations of the defense case on penalty in accordance with Guideline 10.15.1 (E) (3) may influence decisionmakers both on the bench (e.g., an appellate court considering a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel) and off it (e.g., the prosecutor, the Governor).

The Importance of an Integrated Defense

During the investigation of the case, counsel should begin to develop a theme that can be presented consistently through both the first and second phases of the trial. Ideally, “the theory of the trial must complement, support, and lay the groundwork for the theory of mitigation.”²⁷¹ Consistency is crucial because, as discussed in the Commentary to Guideline 10.10.1, counsel risks losing credibility by making an unconvincing argument in the first phase that the defendant

²⁷⁰ See supra text accompanying note 38.

²⁷¹ Lyon, supra note 2, at 711.

did not commit the crime, then attempting to show in the penalty phase why the client committed the crime.²⁷² First phase defenses that seek to reduce the client's culpability for the crime (e.g., by negating intent) rather than to deny involvement altogether are more likely to be consistent with mitigating evidence of mental illness, retardation, domination by a co-defendant, substance abuse, or trauma.²⁷³ But whether or not the guilt phase defense will be that the defendant did not commit the crime, counsel must be prepared from the outset to make the transition to the penalty phase.²⁷⁴

The Defense Presentation at the Penalty Phase

As discussed in the Commentary to Guideline 10.7, areas of mitigation are extremely broad and encompass any evidence that tends to lessen the defendant's moral culpability for the offense or otherwise supports a sentence less than death.²⁷⁵ In particular, a mitigation presentation

²⁷² See id. at 708.

²⁷³ In fact, most statutory mitigating circumstances, which were typically adapted from the Model Penal Code, are "imperfect" versions of first phase defenses such as insanity, diminished capacity, duress, and self-defense. See Carol S. Steiker & Jordan M. Steiker, Let God Sort Them Out? Refining the Individualization Requirement in Capital Sentencing, 102 YALE L.J. 835, 856-57 (1992) (reviewing Beverly Lowry, CROSSED OVER: A MURDER, A MEMOIR (1992)). Of course, the defendant's penalty phase presentation may not constitutionally be limited to statutory mitigating circumstances and the jury must be allowed to give full consideration to any non-statutory ones he advances. See Hitchcock v. Dugger, 481 U.S. 393 (1987); Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586 (1978).

²⁷⁴ For an example of an argument making an effective transition, see Edith Georgi Houlihan, Defending the Accused Child Killer, THE CHAMPION, Apr. 1998, at 23. Lingering doubt is a permissible mitigating circumstance in some jurisdictions (e.g., California, see People v. Sanchez, 12 Cal. 4th 1, 77-78, 906 P.2d 1129, 1178, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 892-93 (1995), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 835 (1996)), but not in others (e.g., Florida, see Way v. State, 760 So. 2d 903, 916-17 (Fla. 2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1155 (2001)).

Existing caselaw in the United States Supreme Court holds that a capital defendant has no federal constitutional right to have lingering doubt considered as a mitigating circumstance at the penalty phase. Franklin v. Lynaugh, 487 U.S. 164, 174-75 (1988). Given the significant number of death row exonerations, and the degree to which these have plainly troubled many Justices, see Atkins v. Virginia, 122 S. Ct. 2242, 2251 n.25 (2002) ("Despite the heavy burden that the prosecution must shoulder in capital cases, we cannot ignore the fact that in recent years a disturbing number of inmates on death row have been exonerated."), there is ample reason to doubt the force of this precedent. See MANDATORY JUSTICE, supra note 48, at 40-41 (advocating allowing lingering doubt to be considered as a mitigating circumstance); Christina S. Pignatelli, Residual Doubt: It's a Life Saver, 13 CAP. DEF. J. 307 (2001).

may be offered not to justify or excuse the crime “but to help explain it.”²⁷⁶ If counsel cannot establish a direct cause and effect relationship between any one mitigating factor and the commission of a capital offense, counsel should endeavor to show the combination of factors that led the client to commit the crime.²⁷⁷ In any event, it is critically important to construct a persuasive narrative, rather than to simply present a catalog of seemingly unrelated mitigating factors.²⁷⁸

Since an understanding of the client’s extended, multigenerational history is often needed for an understanding of his functioning, construction of the narrative normally requires evidence that sets forth and explains the client’s complete social history from before conception to the present. Expert witnesses may be useful for this purpose and, in any event, are almost always crucial to explain the significance of the observations.²⁷⁹ For example, expert testimony may explain the permanent neurological damage caused by fetal alcohol syndrome or childhood abuse, or the hereditary nature of mental illness, and the effects of these impairments on the client’s judgment and impulse control.²⁸⁰ Counsel should choose experts who are tailored specifically to the needs of the case, rather than relying on an “all-purpose” expert who may have insufficient knowledge or experience to testify persuasively.²⁸¹ In order to prepare effectively for trial, and to choose the best experts, counsel should take advantage of training materials and seminars and remain current on developments in fields such as neurology and psychology, which often have important implications for understanding clients’ behavior.²⁸² Counsel should also seek advice and assistance from colleagues and experts in the field of capital litigation.

sentence should not be imposed on a client because doing so would tend to incite the client’s political followers to avenge him by committing further crimes. See, e.g., Benjamin Weiser, Jury Rejects Death Penalty for Terrorist, N.Y. TIMES, July 11, 2001, at B1 (reporting successful use of this argument at trial of defendant convicted of bombing American embassy).

²⁸² High quality continuing legal education programs on the death penalty, such as those noted supra in the Commentary to Guideline 8.1, regularly present such information.

Counsel should ordinarily use lay witnesses as much as possible to provide the factual foundation for the expert's conclusions.²⁸³ Community members such as co-workers, prison guards, teachers, military personnel, or clergy who interacted with the defendant or his family, or have other relevant personal knowledge or experience often speak to the jury with particular credibility.²⁸⁴

Family members and friends can provide vivid first-hand accounts of the poverty and abuse that characterize the lives of many capital defendants. These witnesses can also humanize the client by allowing the jury to see him in the context of his family, showing that they care about him, and providing examples of his capacity to behave in a caring, positive way, such as attempting to protect other family members from domestic violence or trying to be a good parent and provider.²⁸⁵ Similarly, acquaintances who can testify to the client's performance of good works in the community may help the decisionmaker to have a more complete view of him. None of this evidence should be offered as counterweight to the gravity of the crime, but rather to show that the person who committed the crime is a flawed but real individual rather than a generic evildoer, someone for whom one could reasonably see a constricted but worthwhile future.

In addition to humanizing the client, counsel should endeavor to show that the alternatives to the death penalty would be adequate punishment. Studies show that "future dangerousness is on the minds of most capital jurors, and is thus 'at issue' in virtually all capital trials," whether or not it is argued by the prosecution or is a statutorily mandated sentencing consideration.²⁸⁶ Accordingly, counsel should make every effort to present information on this subject. Evidence that the client has adapted well to prison and has had few disciplinary problems can allay jurors' fears and reinforce other positive mitigating evidence.²⁸⁷ Counsel should therefore always encourage the client not only to avoid any disciplinary infractions but also to participate in treatment programs and/or educational, religious or other constructive activities.

Counsel should emphasize through evidence, argument, and/or instruction that the client will either never be eligible for parole, will be required to serve a lengthy minimum mandatory sentence before being considered for parole, or will be serving so many lengthy, consecutive sentences that he has no realistic hope of release.²⁸⁸ In at least some jurisdictions, counsel may be

South Carolina*, 476 U.S. 1, 8 (1986) (jury would "quite naturally" give great weight to the testimony of disinterested witnesses, such as "jailers who would have had no particular reason to be favorably predisposed toward one of their charges"); Sundby, supra note 278, at 1147 (juries tend to respond favorably to testimony of prison employees).

²⁸⁸ The Supreme Court has held that "when 'a capital defendant's future dangerousness is at issue, and the only sentencing alternative to death available to the jury is life imprisonment allowed to present evidence concerning the conditions under which such a sentence would be served.²⁸⁹

Counsel should also consider, in consultation with the client, the possibility of the client expressing remorse for the crime in testimony, in allocution, or in a post-trial statement. If counsel decides that a trial presentation by the client is desirable, and the proposed testimony or allocution is forestalled by evidentiary rulings of the court either disallowing it or conditioning it on unacceptable cross-examination, counsel should take care to make a full record of the circumstances, including the content of the proposed statement. In light of the strong common law underpinnings of allocution and the broad constitutional right to present mitigation that has already been described, any such issue is likely to merit the careful examination of successor counsel.

Finally, in preparing a defense presentation on mitigation counsel must try to anticipate the evidence that may be admitted in response and to tailor the presentation to avoid opening the door to damaging rebuttal evidence that would otherwise be inadmissible.²⁹⁰ without possibility of parole, due process entitles the defendant “to inform the jury of [his] parole ineligibility, either by a jury instruction or in arguments by counsel.”” Kelly v. South Carolina, 534 U.S. 246, 122 S. Ct. 726, 728 (2002) (quoting Shafer v. South Carolina, 532 U.S. 36, 39 (2001) and Simmons v. South Carolina, 512 U.S. 154 (1994)). The precise contours of this rule remain in dispute, see Brown v. Texas, 522 U.S. 940 (1997), and counsel may appropriately seek to extend them (e.g., by applying the rule to other alternative sentences than life imprisonment without parole or by requiring that the jury receive the information through instructions).

Some state courts have held that the trial court must resolve, before the capital sentencing hearing, issues such as the length of other sentences the defendant would serve and whether he would be eligible for parole. See Clark v. Tansy, 118 N.M. 486, 493, 882 P.2d 527, 534 (N.M. 1994) (trial court must, upon defendant’s request, impose sentence for noncapital convictions prior to jury deliberations on death penalty); Turner v. State, 573 So. 2d 657, 674-75 (Miss. 1990) (trial court should determine defendant’s habitual offender status before capital sentencing hearing so jury could be accurately informed of defendant’s parole ineligibility), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 910 (1991).

In other jurisdictions, the defense can at least argue that the defendant is likely to receive lengthy, consecutive sentences. See Jones v. State, 569 So. 2d 1234, 1239-40 (Fla. 1990) (length of time a defendant would be “removed from society” if sentenced to life imprisonment is relevant mitigating evidence that the jury must be permitted to consider), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 836 (1993); Turner v. State, 645 So. 2d 444, 448 (Fla. 1994) (jury could properly consider in mitigation that alternative to death sentences would have been two life sentences with combined minimum mandatory of 50 years).

²⁸⁹ In the federal capital sentencing of a defendant convicted of bombing American embassies overseas, the defense presented evidence about conditions at the federal “Super Max” prison in Florence, Colorado, where the defendant would be incarcerated if sentenced to life without parole. See Benjamin Weiser, Lawyers for Embassy Bomber Push for Prison Over Execution, N.Y. TIMES, June 27, 2001, at B4; see also infra note 310. The defendant was subsequently sentenced to life without parole. See Weiser, supra note 275.

The Defense Response to the Prosecution's Penalty Phase Presentation

Counsel should prepare for the prosecutor's case at the sentencing phase in much the same way as for the prosecutor's case at the guilt/innocence phase.²⁹¹ Counsel should use available discovery mechanisms to ascertain the aggravating and rebuttal evidence the prosecution intends to introduce, and then thoroughly investigate to determine whether this evidence can be excluded, rebutted or undercut. As discussed in the Commentary to Guideline 10.2, jurisdictions vary in whether the defense must be formally notified as to whether the prosecution will seek the death penalty. If required notice has not been given, counsel should also prepare to challenge at the sentencing phase any prosecution efforts that should be barred for failure to give notice.²⁹²

Counsel should carefully research applicable state and federal law governing the admissibility of evidence in aggravation. Where possible, counsel should move to exclude aggravating evidence as inadmissible, and, if that fails, rebut the evidence or offer mitigating evidence that will blunt its impact.²⁹³

If (but only if)²⁹⁴ the defense presents an expert who has examined the client, a prosecution expert may be entitled to examine the client to prepare for rebuttal.²⁹⁵ Counsel should become familiar with the governing law regarding limitations on the scope of expert evaluations conducted by prosecution experts, and file appropriate motions to ensure that the scope of the examination is no broader than legally permissible.²⁹⁶ If the examination is not limited as counsel deem ²⁹⁰ However, as Subsection G suggests, if there is uncertainty as to the scope of how wide this opening would be or if counsel believes that excessive rebuttal is to be admitted, they should object and make a full record on the issue.

²⁹³ See Smith v. Stewart, 189 F.3d 1004, 1010 (9th Cir. 1999) (concluding counsel was ineffective in part for failing to challenge the state's use of prior rape convictions in aggravation as prior violent offenses where both of the convictions occurred when Arizona law did not include violence as an element of rape), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 952 (2000); Parker v. Bowersox, 188 F.3d 923, 929-31 (8th Cir. 1999) (concluding trial counsel was ineffective for failing to present evidence to rebut the only aggravating circumstances), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1038 (2000); Summit v. Blackburn, 795 F.2d 1237, 1244-45 (5th Cir. 1986) (concluding trial counsel was ineffective for failing to argue the lack of corroborating evidence of the sole aggravating factor when under state law a defendant cannot be convicted based solely on uncorroborated confession and the only evidence supporting the aggravating factor was defendant's confession).

²⁹⁴ See Estelle v. Smith, 451 U.S. 454 (1981).

²⁹⁵ As described infra in note 296, several states explicitly confine this right to the penalty phase.

²⁹⁶ See, e.g. FED. R. CRIM. P. 12.2(c) ("No statement made by the defendant in the course of any [court-ordered psychiatric] examination . . . shall be admitted in evidence against the defendant in any criminal proceeding except on an issue respecting mental condition on which the appropriate, Subsection J(1) requires them to give careful consideration to their response (e.g., refuse to participate on possible pain of preclusion, participate at the cost of an irretrievable surrender of information, seek relief from a higher court). Counsel must discuss with the client in advance any evaluation that is to take place and attend the examination in order to protect the client's rights (Subsections J(2)-(3)). Counsel may also seek to have the evaluation observed by a defense expert.

Counsel should integrate the defense response to the prosecution's evidence in aggravation with the overall theory of the case. In some cases, counsel's response to aggravating evidence at the penalty stage converges with the defense presentation at the guilt/innocence phase. The prosecutor will offer no additional evidence at the penalty phase but will simply rely on aggravating factors established by the evidence at the guilt/innocence phase, such as that the murder was committed during the course of a felony.²⁹⁷ In such cases, counsel's rebuttal presentation should focus on the circumstances of the crime, and defendant's conduct as it relates to the elements of the applicable aggravating circumstances.

In other cases, the prosecution will introduce additional aggravating evidence at the penalty stage. If the prosecutor seeks to introduce evidence of unadjudicated prior criminal conduct as aggravating evidence, counsel should fully investigate the circumstances of the prior conduct and determine whether it is properly admissible at the penalty stage.²⁹⁸ defendant has introduced testimony.”); Abernathy v. State, 265 Ga. 754, 462 S.E.2d 615 (1995) (if defendant intends to present expert mental health testimony as mitigating evidence, he must submit to a mental health examination by a State expert, but State expert may only testify in rebuttal to the testimony of a defense expert or of the defendant himself); State v. Reid, 981 S.W.2d 166 (Tenn. 1998) (once defendant files notice of intent to present expert testimony regarding mitigating evidence, State expert may examine defendant, but State expert report will be provided only to the defense until after conviction and after defendant confirms intent to rely on expert testimony as part of case in mitigation); FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.202(d); Dillbeck v. State, 643 So. 2d 1027, 1030-31 (Fla. 1994) (where defendant plans to use in the penalty phase the testimony of an expert who has interviewed him or her, the State is entitled to examine the defendant only after conviction and after the State has certified that it will seek the death penalty), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1022 (1995). See also State v. Johnson, 2003 Ga. LEXIS 12 (Jan. 13, 2003).

ANN. § 921.141(5) (West 2001) (listing as an aggravating circumstance the fact that the crime was committed while the defendant was engaged in, or an accomplice to, the commission or attempted commission or flight after committing or attempting to commit any one of twelve enumerated felonies). In some states, e.g., New York, the prosecution is essentially limited at the penalty phase to the evidence admitted at the guilt phase. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 400.27 (McKinney 2002).

²⁹⁸ In some jurisdictions, only criminal conduct for which the client has been convicted is admissible at the penalty stage. See, e.g., FLA. STAT. ANN. § 921.141(5) (West 2001) (listing as aggravating circumstance the fact that the defendant was previously convicted of capital felony or a felony involving violence). In others, no conviction is necessary, but the admissibility of a prior bad act may depend on other factors. See, e.g., CAL. PENAL CODE § 190.3 (West 1999) (allowing admission of evidence of other criminal activity at penalty phase even though the defendant was not convicted for it, unless the defendant was prosecuted and acquitted or it did not involve the use or threat of violence); Pace v. State, 271 Ga. 829, 842, 524 S.E.2d 490, 505 (1999) (prior

If the prosecution relies upon a prior conviction (as opposed to conduct), counsel should also determine whether it could be attacked as the product of invalid guilty plea,²⁹⁹ as obtained when the client was unrepresented by counsel,³⁰⁰ as a violation of double jeopardy,³⁰¹ or on some other basis. Counsel should determine whether a constitutional challenge to a prior conviction must be litigated in the jurisdiction where the conviction occurred.³⁰²

In jurisdictions where victim-impact evidence is permitted, counsel, mindful that such evidence is often very persuasive to the sentencer, should ascertain what, if any, victim-impact evidence the prosecution intends to introduce at penalty phase, and evaluate all available strategies for contesting the admissibility of such evidence³⁰³ and minimizing its effect on the sentencer.³⁰⁴ In particular, in light of the instability of the caselaw,³⁰⁵ counsel should consider the federal constitutionality of admitting such evidence to be an open field for legal advocacy.³⁰⁶

Tennessee*, 501 U.S. 808, 825 (1991) (overruling Booth and Gathers while noting that Due Process clause is violated if such evidence is “unduly prejudicial”).

³⁰⁶ For example, on the assumption that victim impact evidence in support of the death penalty would be admissible, there is conflicting caselaw in various states on whether the defense can call members of the victim's family to testify in opposition to the client’s execution. Compare Greene v. State, 343 Ark. 526, 531-36 (2001) (defendant not entitled to present testimony of

Counsel should also evaluate how to blunt certain intangible factors that can be damaging to a capital defendant at sentencing, including the heinous nature of the crime or the sentencer's possible racial antagonism for the client.³⁰⁷ In jurisdictions where the alternative to a death sentence is life without the possibility of parole, counsel should consider informing the jury of the defendant's parole ineligibility in order to blunt the concern that the defendant may one day be released from custody.³⁰⁸ If they have not done so previously in building their affirmative case for a penalty less than death,³⁰⁹ counsel should also consider putting on evidence describing the conditions under which the client would serve a life sentence to rebut aggravating evidence of future dangerousness.³¹⁰

Jury Considerations

Personal argument by counsel in support of a sentence less than death is important. Counsel who seeks to persuade a decisionmaker to empathize with the client must convey his or her own empathy.³¹¹ While counsel may also stress the gravity of the sentencer's life and death decision, the fact that the jury will have been death-qualified³¹² means that categorical arguments against the death penalty are unlikely to be effective.

Ct. 71 (2001); supra note 289.

³¹¹ See supra text accompanying note 183; White, supra note 2, at 374-75. An attorney whose contempt for his client is palpable cannot provide effective representation. See, e.g., Rickman v. Bell, 131 F.3d 1150, 1157 (6th Cir. 1997) (counsel's hostility to his own client was so patent that defendant was "functionally . . . totally denied counsel") (quoting Rickman v. Dutton, 864 F. Supp. 686, 701 (1994)), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1133 (1998)); Clark v. State, 690 So. 2d 1280, 1283 (Fla. 1997) ("Counsel completely abdicated his responsibility to Clark when he told the jury that Clark's case presented his most difficult challenge ever in arguing against imposition of the death penalty.").

³¹² See supra text accompanying note 260.

It is essential that counsel object to evidentiary rulings, instructions, or verdict forms that improperly circumscribe the scope of the mitigating evidence that can be presented or the ability of the jury to consider and give effect to such evidence.³¹³ Counsel should also object to and be prepared to rebut arguments that improperly minimize the significance of mitigating evidence³¹⁴ or equate the standards for mitigation with those for a first-phase defense.³¹⁵ At the same time, counsel should request instructions that will ensure that the jury understands, considers, and gives effect to all relevant mitigating evidence.³¹⁶ It is vital that the instructions clearly convey the differing unanimity requirements applicable to aggravating and mitigating factors.³¹⁷

If the jury instructions are insufficient to achieve the purposes described in the previous paragraph or are otherwise confusing or misleading, counsel must object, even if the instructions

³¹³ See, e.g., Penry v. Johnson, 532 U.S. 782, 799-800 (2001) (instructions and verdict form prevented jury from giving effect to mitigating evidence of defendant's mental retardation); McCoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 438-40 (1990) (verdict form and instructions suggesting mitigating circumstances must be found unanimously improperly restricted jurors' ability to give effect to mitigating evidence); Mills v. Maryland, 486 U.S. 367, 384 (1988) (same).

³¹⁴ Prosecutors will frequently try to argue, for example, that "not everybody" who is abused as a child grows up to commit capital murder or that mental illness did not "cause" the defendant to commit the crime. See Haney, supra note 91, at 589-602. Both of these arguments are objectionable on Eighth Amendment grounds because they nullify the effect of virtually all mitigation. Id. In any event, counsel can seek to counter such arguments by emphasizing the unique combination of factors at play in the client's life and demonstrating that there are causal connections between, for example, childhood abuse, neurological damage, and violent behavior. See, e.g., Phyllis Crocker, Childhood Abuse and Adult Murder: Implications For, 77 N.C. L. REV. 1143, 1157-66 (1999) (reviewing scientific literature).

³¹⁵ Arguments confusing the standards for a first phase defense and mitigation also violate the Eighth Amendment. See generally Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104, 113-14 (1982) (trial court improperly rejected mitigating evidence of defendant's emotional disturbance on ground that defendant "knew the difference between right and wrong"); Phyllis L. Crocker, Concepts of Culpability and Deathworthiness: Differentiating Between Guilt and Punishment in Death Penalty Cases, 66 FORDHAM L. REV. 21 (1997).

are the standard ones given in the jurisdiction. If the court does not instruct the jury on individual mitigating circumstances, counsel should spell them out in closing argument.

Record Preservation

In some jurisdictions, counsel is required or allowed to either proffer to the court or present to the sentencer mitigating evidence, regardless of the client's wishes.³¹⁸ Even if such a presentation is not mandatory, counsel should endeavor to put all available mitigating evidence into the record because of its possible impact on subsequent decisionmakers in the case.

³¹⁸ See, e.g., Koon v. Dugger, 619 So. 2d 246, 250 (Fla. 1993) (“When a defendant, against his counsel’s advice, refuses to permit the presentation of mitigating evidence in the penalty phase, counsel must inform the court on the record of the defendant’s decision. Counsel must indicate whether, based on his investigation, he reasonably believes there to be mitigating evidence that could be presented and what that evidence would be.”); State v. Koedatich, 112 N.J. 225, 329-33, 548 A.2d 939, 993-95 (1988) (mitigating factors must be introduced regardless of the defendant’s position), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1017 (1989).

Guideline 10.12 The Official Presentence Report

- A. If an official presentence report or similar document may or will be presented to the court at any time, counsel should become familiar with the procedures governing preparation, submission, and verification of the report. In addition, counsel should:
- 1. where preparation of the report is optional, consider the strategic implications of requesting that a report be prepared;
 - 2. provide to the report preparer information favorable to the client. In this regard, counsel should consider whether the client should speak with the person preparing the report; if the determination is made to do so, counsel should discuss the interview in advance with the client and attend it;
 - 3. review the completed report;
 - 4. take appropriate steps to ensure that improper, incorrect or misleading information that may harm the client is deleted from the report;
 - 5. take steps to preserve and protect the client’s interests where the defense considers information in the presentence report to be improper, inaccurate or misleading.

History of Guideline

This Guideline is based on Guideline 11.8.4 of the original edition. New requirements in the Guideline include: (1) counsel’s obligation to become familiar with the procedures governing preparation, submission, and verification of official presentence reports, where there is a chance that such a report may be presented to the court at any time; (2) counsel’s obligation to provide information that is favorable to the client to the person who is preparing the report; (3) counsel’s obligation to prepare the client for and attend an interview with the person preparing the report, provided counsel has first determined such an interview to be appropriate.

Commentary

In many jurisdictions, an official presentence report may be prepared prior to the imposition of sentence in a capital case.³¹⁹ How such reports may be used in the sentencing process differs from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, and counsel should become familiar with the statutes, court rules, caselaw, and local practice governing their use.³²⁰ There are also constitutional limits on the use of presentence reports in capital sentencing.³²¹

In some jurisdictions, a presentence report is not prepared unless requested by the defense. Counsel should carefully consider the implications of such a request.³²² In jurisdictions where a presentence report is prepared regardless of the wishes of the defense, counsel should submit information favorable to the client, including the client's social history and expert evaluations. If the report preparer does not include the defense materials, counsel should consider how they might otherwise be made part of the client's official records. This information may not only affect the sentencing decision, but also the client's classification, programming and treatment in the prison system following imposition of sentence. In any event, counsel should make a clear record of any inaccuracies they discern in the report.

³¹⁹ See, e.g., Muhammad v. State, 782 So. 2d 343, 363 n.10 (Fla. 2001), cert. denied, 122 S. Ct. 323 (2001); State v. Dunster, 262 Neb. 329, 362-65, 631 N.W.2d 879, 906-08 (2001), cert. denied, 122 S. Ct. 1210 (2002); Ex parte George, 717 So. 2d 858, 859 (Ala. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1024 (1998).

³²⁰ For example, in Florida, a presentence investigation report is required in every case where the defendant is not challenging the imposition of the death penalty and refuses to present mitigating evidence. Muhammad v. State, 782 So. 2d 343, 363 (Fla. 2001), cert. denied, 122 S. Ct. 323 (2001). In California, although a probation report is prepared prior to the trial court's ruling on a capital defendant's post-trial motion to modify the death verdict, it is error for the judge, in ruling on that motion, to consider information contained in the probation report that was not presented to the jury. See, e.g., People v. Kipp, 956 P.2d 1169, 1189-90, 18 Cal. 4th 349, 382-83, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 716 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1152 (1999).

³²¹ See Gardner v. Florida, 430 U.S. 349, 358-62 (1977) (holding that if, in imposing a death sentence, the trial judge relies in part on confidential information in a presentence investigation report, the report must be disclosed to defense counsel or due process is violated).

³²² For example, in Ohio, a presentence report is prepared only at the request of the defense, and if the defense requests the preparation of a report, the prosecution is allowed to present victim-impact evidence, other crimes evidence, and other information that is not otherwise admissible at penalty phase to the jury. See OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2929.03(D)(1) (Anderson 1999); State v. White, 85 Ohio St. 3d 433, 444-46, 709 N.E.2d 140, 153-55, cert. denied, 528 U.S. 938 (1999). Because Ohio provides capital defendants the right to reasonably necessary investigation, experts, or other assistance for trial and penalty phases, see OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2929.024 (Anderson 1999), capital counsel who request a presentence report instead may be ineffective for doing so. See Glenn v. Tate, 71 F.3d 1204, 1209-10 (6th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 910 (1996).

Guideline 10.13 The Duty to Facilitate the Work of Successor Counsel

In accordance with professional norms, all persons who are or have been members of the defense team have a continuing duty to safeguard the interests of the client and should cooperate fully with successor counsel. This duty includes, but is not limited to:

- A. maintaining the records of the case in a manner that will inform successor counsel of all significant developments relevant to the litigation;
- B. providing the client’s files, as well as information regarding all aspects of the representation, to successor counsel;
- C. sharing potential further areas of legal and factual research with successor counsel; and
- D. cooperating with such professionally appropriate legal strategies as may be chosen by successor counsel.

History of Guideline

This Guideline is new.

Related Standards

Commentary

All members of the defense team must anticipate and facilitate the duty of successor counsel, embodied in Guideline 7.1 (B) (1), to investigate the defense presentation at all prior stages of the case. As set forth in Subsection A, this duty includes an affirmative obligation to maintain contemporaneous records that will enable successor counsel to have a factual predicate for the assertion of whatever legal claims may arise. For example, there may be issues as to whether the government produced certain evidence or whether counsel knew of the existence of a particular witness or legal theory. Each counsel’s files should be maintained in a manner sufficient to enable successor counsel to answer questions of this sort through appropriate documentation (e.g., notes of client interviews, telephone message slips, etc.).

Even after team members have been formally replaced, they must continue to safeguard the interests of the client. Specifically, they must cooperate with the professionally appropriate strategies of successor counsel (Subsection D). And this is true even when (as is commonly the case) successor counsel are investigating or asserting a claim that prior counsel was ineffective.³²³

³²³ See David M. Siegel, My Reputation or Your Liberty (or Your Life): The Ethical Obligations of Criminal Defense Counsel in Postconviction Proceedings, 23 J. LEGAL PROF. 85, 90-91 (1998/1999) (“While any criminal defense lawyer whose client is convicted is subject to the possibility of a claim for ineffective assistance, lawyers in capital cases are virtually guaranteed such claims.”).

As the California Bar has ruled in a formal opinion, “[T]he Rules of Professional Conduct impose a duty upon trial counsel to fully and candidly discuss matters relating to the representation of the client with appellate counsel and to respond to the questions of appellate counsel, even if to do so would be to disclose that trial counsel failed to provide effective assistance of counsel. This decision is in accord with the general rule that the attorney owes a duty of complete fidelity to the client and to the interests of the client.”³²⁴

The duties contained in this Guideline are of enormous practical significance to the vindication of the client’s legal rights. “[T]he strategic thinking of the lawyer, and learning this strategic thinking[,] is absolutely critical to the thorough presentation of a post-conviction claim. It should be routinely and openly presented to the post-conviction counsel.”³²⁵ To do otherwise is professionally unethical.³²⁶

Guideline 10.14 Duties of Trial Counsel After Conviction

- A. Trial counsel should be familiar with all state and federal post-conviction options available to the client. Trial counsel should discuss with the client the post-conviction procedures that will or may follow imposition of the death sentence.
- B. Trial counsel should take whatever action(s), such as filing a notice of appeal, and/or motion for a new trial, will maximize the client’s ability to obtain post-conviction relief.
- C. Trial counsel should not cease acting on the client’s behalf until successor counsel has entered the case or trial counsel’s representation has been formally terminated. Until that time, Guideline 10.15 applies in its entirety.
- D. Trial counsel should take all appropriate action to ensure that the client obtains successor counsel as soon as possible.

History of Guideline

This Guideline is based on Guideline 11.9.1 of the original edition. Subsection B has been revised to require that trial counsel take whatever action(s) will maximize the client’s ability to obtain post-conviction relief. Additionally, Subsection D has been revised to require that counsel take all appropriate action to ensure that the client obtains successor counsel as soon as possible.

Commentary

Post-conviction procedures, and therefore the duties of counsel, vary among jurisdictions.³²⁷ Whatever the procedures, the client should be advised of what will happen following the imposition of sentence and potential legal consequences of the client’s anticipated actions. For example, if the client will be given any psychological examination or will otherwise be interviewed by prison personnel or others following the court’s imposition of sentence, the client should be counseled regarding that interview and advised of the potential legal impact of any statements the client might make there.³²⁸

³²⁷ E.g., trial counsel in California is given, by statute, certain post-conviction duties and must remain on the case until the record is certified. CAL. PENAL CODE §1239(b), 1240.1(e)(1) (West 1982 & Supp. 2002).

³²⁸ See CAL. ATT’YS FOR CRIM. JUSTICE & CAL. DEFENDERS ASS’N, CALIFORNIA DEATH PENALTY DEFENSE MANUAL 1-38 to 1-40 (1986).

The client should also be advised of all available avenues of judicial review³²⁹ and what the client must do to secure review (e.g., sign a notice of appeal or affidavit of indigency). Trial counsel should file the necessary documents and take whatever other steps are needed to preserve the client's right to review, such as ordering transcripts of the trial proceedings and objecting to any governmentally imposed barriers (e.g., failure to provide counsel) to obtaining such review. If there are any further actions available that might expand the scope of review (e.g., filing a motion for a new trial), trial counsel should take them.³³⁰

In short, trial counsel is responsible for making sure that the client's legal position does not suffer any harm during the period of transition to successor counsel. To avoid prejudice to the client, trial counsel should, in accordance with Subsection D, make every effort to ensure that this period is as short as possible. But, in any event, trial counsel may not cease acting on the client's behalf until successor counsel has entered the case. As Subsection C provides, until that time trial counsel must discharge the duties common to all post-conviction counsel as set forth in Guideline 10.15 (including obtaining a stay of execution if needed).

Trial counsel must also monitor the client's personal condition as set out in Guideline 10.15(E)(2). If the client's mental status deteriorates under the impact of the conviction and death sentence, the client may inappropriately decide to cease efforts to secure review, thereby creating a series of problems for the defense team that might well have been avoided.

Once successor counsel are in place, trial counsel continue to be under the obligation, imposed by Guideline 10.13, to recognize a continuing duty to safeguard the interests of the client and to cooperate fully with successor counsel.

³²⁹ Some death penalty states provide for automatic appellate review, e.g., CAL. PENAL CODE § 1239(b) (West 1982 & Supp. 2002); MD. CODE ANN. art. 27, § 414(a) (2002) (this section has been repealed by 2002 Md. Laws 26, § 1, effective Oct. 1, 2002; an analogous provision has been enacted by 2002 Md. Laws 26, § 2, to be codified as MD. CODE ANN., CRIM. LAW § 2-401(a)); MD. R. 8-306(c); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 15A-2000(d)(1) (2001).

³³⁰ This comports with the requirements for counsel in all criminal cases. See NAT'L LEGAL AID & DEFENDER ASS'N, PERFORMANCE GUIDELINES FOR CRIMINAL DEFENSE REPRESENTATION Guideline 9.2(a), (b) (1995). Cf. Mayo v. Cockrell, 287 F.3d 336 (5th Cir. 2002) (denying federal habeas corpus relief where trial counsel was unaware that he remained on case until replaced, appellate counsel was unaware of his appointment until after expiration of time for filing of new trial motion, and a meritorious new trial motion went unfiled), cert. denied, 123 S.Ct. 443 (2002).

Guideline 10.15.1 Duties of Post-Conviction Counsel

- A. Counsel representing a capital client at any point after conviction should be familiar with the jurisdiction’s procedures for setting execution dates and providing notice of them. Post-conviction counsel should also be thoroughly familiar with all available procedures for seeking a stay of execution.
- B. If an execution date is set, post-conviction counsel should immediately take all appropriate steps to secure a stay of execution and pursue those efforts through all available fora.
- C. Post-conviction counsel should seek to litigate all issues, whether or not previously presented, that are arguably meritorious under the standards applicable to high quality capital defense representation, including challenges to any overly restrictive procedural rules. Counsel should make every professionally appropriate effort to present issues in a manner that will preserve them for subsequent review.
- D. The duties of the counsel representing the client on direct appeal should include filing a petition for certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States. If appellate counsel does not intend to file such a petition, he or she should immediately notify successor counsel if known and the Responsible Agency.
- E. Post-conviction counsel should fully discharge the ongoing obligations imposed by these Guidelines, including the obligations to:
 - 1. maintain close contact with the client regarding litigation developments; and
 - 2. continually monitor the client’s mental, physical and emotional condition for effects on the client’s legal position;
 - 3. keep under continuing review the desirability of modifying prior counsel’s theory of the case in light of subsequent developments; and
 - 4. continue an aggressive investigation of all aspects of the case.

History of Guideline

This Guideline is based on Guideline 11.9.3 of the original edition. Subsections A, B, and D are entirely new. Subsection C includes new language regarding the manner in which post-conviction counsel must present all arguably meritorious issues. Subsection E includes new language emphasizing the ongoing obligations imposed by these Guidelines upon post-conviction counsel.

Commentary

Almost all of the duties imposed by Guidelines 10.3 et seq. are applicable in the post-conviction context. Subsection E notes this by way of reminder. Post-conviction counsel should consult those Guidelines and accompanying commentaries.

The Paramount Duty to Obtain a Stay

No matter how compelling the client's post-conviction case may be, he faces the risk that his execution will moot it.³³¹ This is a phenomenon unique to capital litigation and one that must be uppermost in the mind of post-conviction counsel.

When states fail to provide post-conviction counsel entirely or in a timely manner,³³² or request the setting of an execution date to advance the litigation,³³³ or impose short periods of time for filing substantive post-judgment pleadings, the result is emergency requests for stays of execution so that substantive pleadings will be considered.³³⁴ Although the ABA and other ³³¹ See Brooks v. Estelle, 702 F.2d 84 (5th Cir. 1983) (dismissing appeal, which had received certificate of probable cause from district court, as moot since petitioner had been executed following the denial of a stay by Brooks v. Estelle, 697 F.2d 586 (5th Cir. 1982)).

³³² There is no right to state post-conviction counsel in Georgia. Gibson v. Turpin, 270 Ga. 855, 513 S.E.2d 186, cert. denied, 528 U.S. 946 (1999). In August 1996, Georgia Supreme Court Justice Robert Benham noted that several persons under sentence of death in Georgia were in "immediate need of legal representation," and asked area law firms to volunteer. One Atlanta civil firm that volunteered was assigned the case of Marcus Wellons. Three days after the firm received a copy of the trial transcript, the trial court set an execution date for two weeks later. The firm rushed to the Georgia Supreme Court and asked for more time to submit a formal post-conviction petition. Hours before Mr. Wellons's scheduled execution, the Court denied the request by a 4-3 vote. As guards were about to shave Mr. Wellons's head for that evening's electrocution, the federal district court granted a stay of execution. State counsel and the federal defender were given ten months to prepare the federal petition. Bill Rankin, When Death Row Inmates Go To Court Without Lawyers: In the Late Stages of Their Fight to Stay Alive, Some Must Represent Themselves, ATLANTA J. & CONST., Dec. 29, 1996, at D5; Bill Rankin & Rhonda Cook, Death Penalty: Sudden Speed, Then a Delay, ATLANTA J. & CONST., Dec. 13, 1996, at A1.

³³³ For example, in Kentucky capital cases the Attorney General invariably requests an execution date at the end of direct appeal, and the Governor invariably signs the death warrant. No stay of execution may be granted until the state post-conviction petition is filed. As a result, in order to obtain a stay, counsel must often file a state post-conviction petition well before the time allowed under state law because there is an outstanding execution date. The practice is the same in federal habeas proceedings. See, e.g., Execution of Killer Delayed, CINCINNATI ENQUIRER, June 9, 2000, at D1B.

³³⁴ When a capital case enters a phase of being "under warrant" – i.e., when a death warrant has been signed – time commitments for counsel increase, "due in large part to the necessary duplication of effort in the preparation of several petitions which might have to be filed simultaneously in different courts." Standing Comm. on Legal Aid & Indigent Defense, ABA Bar Information Program, Time & Expense Analysis in Postconviction Death Penalty Cases, Feb.

professional voices have repeatedly condemned this system,³³⁵ defense counsel must make the best of it – by seeking stays or reprieves from any available source and challenging the unfairness of any overly restrictive constraints on filing of substantive pleadings and/or stays.

And to the extent that counsel can responsibly reduce the stresses imposed upon the client by this often-nightmarish system, counsel should of course do so (e.g., by reassuring the client of the unlikelihood of the execution actually occurring on its nominal date, notwithstanding the alarming preparations being made by the prison).³³⁶

Keeping the Client Whole

Even if their executions have been safely stayed, however, the mental condition of many capital clients will deteriorate the longer they remain on death row. This may result in suicidal tendencies and/or impairments in realistic perception and rational decisionmaking.³³⁷ Counsel should seek to minimize this risk by staying in close contact with the client.³³⁸

Counsel’s ongoing monitoring of the client’s status, required by Subsection E(2), also has a strictly legal purpose. As described in the text accompanying notes 187-90 supra, a worsening in the client’s mental condition may directly affect the legal posture of the case and the lawyer needs to be aware of developments. For example, the case establishing the proposition that insane persons cannot be executed³³⁹ was heavily based on notes on the client's mental status that counsel had kept over a period of months.

The Labyrinth of Post-conviction Litigation

A. The Direct Appeal

Practice varies among jurisdictions as to the limits of the appellate process and the relationship between direct appeals and collateral post-conviction challenges to a conviction or sentence.³⁴⁰ Issues that are only partially or minimally reflected by the record, or that are outside the record, should be explored by appellate counsel as a predicate for informed decision making about legal strategy.

As Subsection C emphasizes, it is of critical importance that counsel on direct appeal proceed, like all post-conviction counsel, in a manner that maximizes the client's ultimate chances of success. "Winnowing" issues in a capital appeal can have fatal consequences. Issues abandoned by counsel in one case, pursued by different counsel in another case and ultimately successful, cannot necessarily be reclaimed later.³⁴¹ When a client will be killed if the case is lost, counsel should not let any possible ground for relief go unexplored or unexploited.³⁴²

³³⁹ Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 399 (1986).

³⁴⁰ In some states, there is a unitary appeal system in which direct appeal and collateral challenges such as ineffective assistance of counsel claims are raised simultaneously. See, e.g., IDAHO CODE § 19-2719 (Michie Supp. 2000). In other jurisdictions, ineffective assistance of counsel claims generally may not be raised on direct appeal but are reserved for separate post-conviction proceedings. See, e.g., Lawrence v. State, 691 So. 2d 1068, 1074 (Fla. 1997) (claims of ineffective assistance of counsel not cognizable on direct appeal) cert. denied, 522 U.S. 880 (1997).

³⁴¹ For example, in Smith v. Murray, 477 U.S. 527 (1986), appellate counsel failed to assert on direct appeal that the defendant's Fifth Amendment rights had been violated by the testimony of a psychiatrist who had examined the defendant without warning him the interview could be used against him. The Virginia Supreme Court had rejected such claims at the time of the defendant's direct appeal. The U.S. Supreme Court reached a contrary result, however, in Estelle v. Smith, 451 U.S. 454 (1981). In a Catch-22 for the client, the Court concluded appellate counsel was not ineffective, because "winnowing out weaker arguments on appeal and focusing on those more likely to prevail, far from being evidence of incompetence, is the hallmark of effective appellate advocacy." Murray, 477 U.S. at 536 (citation omitted). At the same time, the claim was not deemed sufficiently "novel" to constitute cause for the procedural default because "forms of the claim he now advances had been percolating in the lower courts for years at the time of his original appeal." Id. at 536-37 (citations omitted). Mr. Smith was therefore barred from raising the issue in federal habeas proceedings and was subsequently executed.

³⁴² It is for this reason that, consistent with the text supra accompanying note 27, Subsection C refers to "issues that are arguably meritorious under the standards applicable to high quality capital defense representation."

Appellate counsel must be familiar with the deadlines for filing petitions for state and federal post-conviction relief and how they are affected by the direct appeal. If the conviction and sentence are affirmed, appellate counsel should ordinarily file on the client's behalf a petition for certiorari review in the United States Supreme Court. Under the AEDPA, a client's one-year statute of limitations for filing a petition for federal habeas corpus relief generally begins to run upon the denial of certiorari or when the 90 days for filing a petition has elapsed.³⁴³ Appellate counsel should therefore immediately inform successor counsel if he or she does not intend to file a petition for certiorari or when a petition for certiorari is denied; if successor counsel is not yet appointed, counsel should promptly advise the Responsible Agency of the need to designate successor counsel. (Subsection D)

Appellate counsel should also advise the client directly of all applicable deadlines for seeking post-conviction relief and explain the tolling provisions of the AEDPA,³⁴⁴ emphasizing that a state post-conviction motion should be filed sufficiently in advance of the one-year deadline to allow adequate time to prepare a federal habeas corpus petition. In states in which the direct appeal and state post-conviction review are conducted simultaneously,³⁴⁵ post-conviction proceedings may be concluded at the same time as, or even before, the direct appeal, effectively rendering the tolling provisions inapplicable.

In light of this mutual dependency among all the post-conviction legal procedures, it is of the utmost importance that, in accordance with Guideline 10.13, appellate counsel cooperates fully with successor counsel and turn over all relevant files promptly.

B. Collateral Relief – State and Federal

As described in the Commentary to Guideline 1.1, providing high quality legal representation in collateral review proceedings in capital cases requires enormous amounts of time, energy and knowledge. The field is increasingly complex and ever changing. As state and federal collateral proceedings become ever-more intertwined, counsel representing a capital client in state collateral proceedings must become intimately familiar with federal habeas corpus procedures. As indicated above, for example, although the AEDPA deals strictly with cases being litigated in federal court, its statute of limitations provision creates a de facto statute of limitations for filing a collateral review petition in state court. Some state collateral counsel have failed to understand the AEDPA's implications, and unwittingly forfeited their client's right to federal habeas corpus review.³⁴⁶

³⁴⁶ See, e.g., Goodman v. Johnson, No. 99-20452 (5th Cir. Sept. 19, 1999) (unpublished), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1131 (2000); Cantu-Tzin v. Johnson, 162 F.3d 295 (5th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1091 (1999). Spencer Goodman was executed by Texas in January 2000, and

Collateral counsel has the same obligation as trial and appellate counsel to establish a relationship of trust with the client. But by the time a case reaches this stage, the client will have put his life into the hands of at least one other lawyer and found himself on death row. Counsel should not be surprised if the client initially exhibits some hostility and lack of trust, and must endeavor to overcome these barriers.

Ultimately, winning collateral relief in capital cases will require changing the picture that has previously been presented. The old facts and legal arguments – those which resulted in a conviction and imposition of the ultimate punishment, both affirmed on appeal – are unlikely to motivate a collateral court to make the effort required to stop the momentum the case has already gained in rolling through the legal system.³⁴⁷ Because an appreciable portion of the task of post-conviction counsel is to change the overall picture of the case, Subsection E(3) requires that they keep under continuing review the desirability of amending the defense theory of the case, whether one has been formulated by prior counsel in accordance with Guideline 10.10.1 or not.

For similar reasons, collateral counsel cannot rely on the previously compiled record but must conduct a thorough, independent investigation in accordance with Guideline 10.7. (Subsection E(4)). As demonstrated by the high percentage of reversals and disturbingly large number of innocent persons sentenced to death, the trial record is unlikely to provide either a complete or accurate picture of the facts and issues in the case.³⁴⁸ That may be because of information concealed by the state, because of witnesses who did not appear at trial or who testified falsely, because the trial attorney did not conduct an adequate investigation in the first instance, because new developments show the inadequacies of prior forensic evidence, because of juror misconduct, or for a variety of other reasons.

Two parallel tracks of post-conviction investigation are required. One involves reinvestigating the capital case; the other focuses on the client. Reinvestigating the case means examining the facts underlying the conviction and sentence, as well as such items as trial counsel's performance, judicial bias or prosecutorial misconduct. Reinvestigating the client means assembling a more-thorough biography of the client than was known at the time of trial, not only to discover mitigation that was not presented previously, but also to identify mental-health claims which potentially reach beyond sentencing issues to fundamental questions of competency and mental-state defenses.

As with every other stage of capital proceedings, collateral counsel has a duty in accordance with Guideline 10.8 to raise and preserve all arguably meritorious issues.³⁴⁹ These include not only challenges to the conviction and sentence, but also issues which may arise subsequently.³⁵⁰ Collateral counsel should assume that any meritorious issue not contained in the initial application will be waived or procedurally defaulted in subsequent litigation, or barred by strict rules governing subsequent applications.³⁵¹ Counsel should also be aware that any change in the availability of post-conviction relief may itself provide an issue for further litigation.³⁵² This is especially true if the change occurred after the case was begun and could be argued to have affected strategic decisions along the way.

³⁵⁰ For example, although the Justices disagree on the point, as shown most recently by their varying opinions respecting the certiorari petition in Foster v. Florida, 123 S. Ct. 470 (2002), it may well be that after a certain length of time continued confinement on Death Row ripens into an Eighth Amendment violation.

Guideline 10.15.2 Duties of Clemency Counsel

- A. Clemency counsel should be familiar with the procedures for and permissible substantive content of a request for clemency.
- B. Clemency counsel should conduct an investigation in accordance with Guideline 10.7.
- C. Clemency counsel should ensure that clemency is sought in as timely and persuasive a manner as possible, tailoring the presentation to the characteristics of the particular client, case and jurisdiction.
- D. Clemency counsel should ensure that the process governing consideration of the client's application is substantively and procedurally just, and, if it is not, should seek appropriate redress.

History of Guideline

This Guideline is based on Guideline 11.9.4 of the original edition. Subsection D of the Guideline was added to reflect the effect of the decision in Ohio Adult Parole Authority v. Woodard, 523 U.S. 272 (1998), on the duties of clemency counsel.

Commentary

As discussed in the text accompanying notes 57-64 supra, a series of developments in law, public opinion, and forensic science suggests that clemency petitions in capital cases will in the future enjoy a greater success rate than they do now, which will place additional demands on clemency counsel.

As Subsection B emphasizes, further investigation is critical at this phase. Beyond that, the manner in which clemency is dispensed in the jurisdiction controls what clemency counsel needs to do.³⁵³

Counsel should be familiar with the clemency-dispenser, and with the factors the ³⁵³ The states utilize 50 different clemency processes, which can be categorized in the following manner: the Governor has sole authority over the clemency process; the Governor cannot grant clemency without a recommendation from a board or advisory group to do so; the Governor decides clemency after receiving a nonbinding recommendation from a board or advisory group; a board or advisory group makes the clemency determination; or, the Governor sits as a member of the board which makes the clemency determination. The Death Penalty Information Group details the process by state, available at <http://www.deathpenaltyinfo.org/clemency.htm/#process>. For federal death row inmates, the President alone has pardon power. See U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

clemency-dispenser has historically found persuasive. As possible innocence is the most frequently cited reason for clemency,³⁵⁴ if there is a possibility that the client is innocent, counsel should mobilize an especially detailed investigation to determine whether confidence in the client's guilt can be undermined. If doubts about the fairness of the judicial proceedings that produced the death sentence have led to clemency in other cases, counsel should consider whether particular instances of procedural unfairness can be set out as to the client's case.³⁵⁵ If personal characteristics of the condemned, such as youth, mental illness,³⁵⁶ spousal abuse, or cultural barriers, have proven helpful in past clemency proceedings, then counsel should discover and demonstrate examples of the client's similar characteristics to the extent possible.

In any event, the presentation should be as complete and persuasive as possible, utilizing all appropriate resources in support (e.g. relevant outside organizations, the trial judge, prominent citizens), and discussing explicitly why the clemency-dispenser should act favorably notwithstanding the repeated reaffirmation of the client's conviction and sentence by the judicial system. For example, counsel may be in a position to argue that the underlying claims were powerful ones but procedural technicalities barred the courts from addressing their merits.

As discussed in the text accompanying notes 63-64 supra, due process protections apply to clemency proceedings, and counsel should be alert to the possibility of developing the nascent existing law in this area.

³⁵⁴ The Death Penalty Information Center reports that since 1976, of the 35 death row inmates who have been granted clemency for reasons other than the personal convictions of the governor in opposition to the death penalty, the possible innocence of the condemned inmate was provided as the reason for granting clemency in 16 cases (46%). Available at <http://www.deathpenaltyinfo.org/clemency.html>.

³⁵⁵ For example, in 1999 the Governor of Arkansas commuted the death sentence of Bobby Ray Fretwell after receiving a letter from a juror at Fretwell's trial stating that he had been the lone holdout against the death penalty, but had relented for fear that he would be an outcast in the small community where the killing had occurred. See Arkansas Governor Spares Killer's Life After Juror's Plea, L.A. TIMES, Feb. 6, 1999, at A19. In the case of Charlie Brooks, who was executed in Texas in 1982, counsel enlisted the trial prosecutor to argue before the Board of Pardons and Paroles that it would be unfair to execute the client when his co-defendant was serving a term of years and the state did not know who the triggerman had been. See Robert Reinhold, Groups Race to Prevent Texas Execution, N.Y. Times, Dec. 6, 1982, at A16.

³⁵⁶ In 2002, the Georgia Board of Pardons commuted the death sentence of Alexander Williams to life in prison without parole in large part due to Williams's profound mental illness. See Rhonda Cook, Death penalty reduced to life, ATLANTA J. & CONST., Feb. 26, 2002, at A1.
